though perhaps in the case of an express contract to pay interest independ- 11. laterently of the principal, it may be otherwise(c).

And in a recent case it was held, that on a promissory note payable on demand, where there is no allegation or proof of any agreement for *interest, the plaintiff is only [ *682 ] entitled to interest from the day of issuing the writ of summons(h). where the maker of a promissory note promised for himself and his executors to pay A. (i) Roffey v, Greenwell, 2 Perry & Dav. 365, cur. adv. vult. Lord Denman, C. J. delivered the judgment of the court. "The question was from what period interest should be computed on a note in the following form—' I promise for myself and my executors to pay to

Frances Harris (or her executors) one year after my death, 300l. with legal interest,' no proof of the consideration being given. It was admitted that no case in point could be found, nor any which lays down the rule or principle by which it is to be decided. Generally speaking, an instrument of this sort carries interest from its date whether payable on demand or at a time specified. The reason is, that the party who makes the promise must be expected to keep it, and if he does, no interest can be due from any other period than the date. In the present case there is indeed another period from which it might be computed, that of the maker's death; but it appears improbable that if that was his intention he should not have expressed it with more distinctness. We think, in the absence of all particular proof, that we must presume the note to have been given for value, so that interest would be due from the date. If that be doubtful, the instrument ought to be construed most strongly against the maker. Plaintiff is therefore entitled to the larger sum, and judgment must be entered for it.'

coverable, and that when a note is payable by instalments, in which it is stipulated that on failure of payment of any instalment the whole is to become due, the interest is to be calculated on the whole sum remaining unpaid on default of any instalment, and not on the respective instalments at the respective times when they would become payable (n).

With respect to the time when interest stops, Lord Mansfield declared(0),

that the general practice of the associates in taking damages in cases where the debt carried interest, was to stop at the commencement of the action(p); which practice was not founded in law, but in mistake and misapprehension; and that in point of justice, interest should be carried down quite to the actual payment of the money; but as that cannot be, it should be carried down to the time when the demand is completely liquidated by the judgment being signed, by which means complete justice is done to the plaintiff, and the temptation to a defendant to make use of all the unjust dilatoriness of chicane is taken away: for if interest were to stop at the commencement of the suit, when the sum is large the defendant might gain by protracting the cause in the most expensive and vexatious manner; though, even in a [ *683 ] *case of great hardship, interest beyond the time of final judgment has been refused (q). In trover for bills of exchange, interest from the date of the final judgment upon all such bills as has been received before the judgment, and upon all such as had been received afterwards from the time of the receipt, was allowed in the Exchequer Chamber on error(r); and though it was afterwards determined, that in trover for bills, interest could not be recovered after the time of the demand and refusal to deliver them up(s), this would now be otherwise, since the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 29, which authorises the jury in all actions of trover, if they shall think fit, to give damages in the nature of interest, over and above the value of the goods at the time of the conversion. We have seen, that after a tender and wrongful refusal to deliver a bill, the interest thereon ceases to run(t).

At what rate.

The rate of interest allowed in this country is 51. per cent. per annum, as well in courts of equity as at law(u)(1). But when a higher rate of interest is allowed in a foreign country, it may be recovered here, and in India it is not always limited to 121. per cent. (x)(2). In an action against the

We have before suggested that it may be expedient to limit the amount of interest, as well as reexchange and expences, by the express terms of the bill(a).

III. Expences, &c.

III. Expences, &c.

The only expence which the holder of a bill, at the time it becomes due, Noting and can be put to by the dishonour of it, is that of the charge for noting and Protesting, protesting, and he cannot demand more of any of the parties to the bill than a satisfaction for that expence; and this only in the case of a foreign bill. But a party who has been obliged to pay *the holder in consequence of the [*684] acceptor's refusal, frequently is put to other expences by the return of the bill, such as re-exchange, postage, commission, and provision(b).

An indorser of a bill having had an action brought against him by the in- Costs of dorsee, is not entitled to recover from the acceptor the costs incurred in Action.

(y) Gantt r. Mackenzie, 3 Campb. 51, (Ch. j. 837), This was an action on a bill of exchange for 1000l., drawn at Barbadoes, the Sth February, 1809, by the defendant, on Scott, Idles, and Co. in London, payable to the plaintiff at sixty days sight. The bill was refused acceptance on the 17th April, 1809, and was afterwards presented for payment on the 19th June following, and again dishonoured. The only question was, from what period interest was to be calculated. Lord Ellenborough left this, upon the custom of merchants, to the special jury, who said the holder of the bill was entitled to 10l. per cent. as damages, and that interest was to be allowed only from the time when the bill was presented for payment; and

Mr. Waddington, the foreman, observed, that he had known it to be so settled in a case before Mr. Justice Buller. Verdict accordingly. But in a case of Harrison v. Dickson, tried at the same sittings, which was an action against the indorser of a bill of exchange, drawn upon England from New South Wales, the plaintiff did not claim any per centage upon the principal as damages, and was allowed interest from the time the bill was dishonoured for non-acceptance.

such action, unless there was an express and collateral contract of indemnity(c). In a later case, however, it seems to have been doubted whether such costs might not be recovered as unliquidated damages, in a special action by the drawer against acceptor (d).

Where an action was commenced against a surety on a promissory note, who agreed that if the plaintiff would take proceedings against the principal, he, the surety, would pay the extra costs occasioned thereby; and the plaintiff did so, and afterwards issued execution against the surety for the balance due on the note, and also the extra costs, it was held, that this was a collateral agreement upon which the plaintiff might sue, but that he could not issue execution for the costs incurred against the principal; and the court ordered the execution to be reduced accordingly (e).

IV. Reexchange (f).Nature of.

IV. RE-EXCHANGE.

RE-EXCHANGE is the expence incurred by the bill being dishonoured in a foreign country in which it is payable, and returned to the country in which it is made or indorsed, and there taken up: the amount of it depends on the cause of the exchange between the countries through which the bill has been negotiated (g). It is not necessary for the plaintiff to shew that he has paid the re-exchange; it suffices if he be liable to pay it; but if the jury find that there was not at the time any course of re-exchange between the two foreign places, then no re-exchange is recoverable (h)(1). It appears not to be decided whether any exchange or re-exchange can be allowed between this and an enemy's country (i). It is said, that the relative [ *685 ] abundance *or scarcity of money in different countries, is what forms the ex-

(i) De Tastet v. Baring, 11 East, 265; 2
Campb. 65, (Chit. j. 768). It is there said the nature of the transaction which gives rise to the question of exchange and re-exchange, is this: A merchant in London draws on his debtor in Lisbon a bill in favour of another for so much, in the currency of Portugal, for which he receives its corresponding value at the time in English currency; and that corresponding value fluctuates from time to time, according to the greater or lesser demand there may be in the London market for bills on Lisbon, and the facility of obtaining them: the difference of that value constitutes the rate of exchange on Lis-bon. The like circumstances and considerations take place at Lisbon, and constitute in like manner the rate of exchange on London. When the holder, therefore, of a London bill, drawn on Lisbon, is refused payment of it in Lisbon, the actual loss which he sustains is not the identical sum which he gave for the bill in London; but the amount of its contents, if paid at Lisbon, where it was due, and the sum which it will cost him to replace that amount upon the spot by a bill upon London, which he is entitled to draw upon the persons there, who are liable to him upon the former bill. That cost, whatever it may be, constitutes his actual loss, and the charge for re-exchange. And it is quite immaterial whether or not he in fact redraws such a bill on London, and raises the money upon it in the Lisbon market; his loss by the dishonour of the London bill is exactly the same, and cannot depend on the circumstance whether he repay himself immediately by re-change between those countries(k). In the drawing of bills on a foreign IV. Recountry, the value of money in that country is the first thing to be inquired exchange. into; thus, for instance, supposing 71,000 livres turnois are worth 603l. 19s. Nature of 10d. English money sterling, and that an English merchant has sold goods of the value of 603l. 19s. 10d. to a Frenchman, who wishes to pay for the same by a bill of exchange payable in France, the bill must of course be drawn for 71,000 livres turnois: if at the time the bill is due the exchange is in favour of France, and consequently the value of 71,000 livres turnois exceeds that of 603l. 19s. 10d. English money, and the bill be returned to this country, and the drawer or an indorser be called on to take it up, he may (as in the case of Mellish v. Simeon(1) be obliged to pay 3001. 4s. 5d. more than the amount of the bill, which sum forms what is called the re-exchange, and is the difference between the draft and re-draft(m). In trover for certain billetes paid to the plaintiffs by the Pururian government, and purporting to be of the value of 16,000 dollars, the cause was referred to arbitration, and an award having been made in favour of the plaintiffs, the court ordered the value of the billetes to be estimated by the prothonotory at the rate at which they were current at the time of the award; and it was held, that such value was to be estimated as the value of a bill of exchange for the amount of the dollars specified in the billetes, upon a solvent house in the country where they were issued, although they were at a considerable discount at the time of making the award (n).

It appears that the drawer of a bill is liable for the whole amount of the reexchange, occasioned by the circuitous mode of returning the bill through various countries in which it has been negotiated, as much as for that occasioned by a direct return, although payment of the bill were expressly prohibited by the laws of the country on which it was *drawn(0). But the ac- [ *686 ] ceptor is not liable for re-exchange; for his contract cannot be carried further than to pay the sum specified in the bill, together with legal interest, where interest is due(p).

drawing for the amount of the former bill, with the addition of the charges upon it, including the amount of re-exchange, if unfavourable to this country at the time, or whether he wait till a future settlement of accounts with the party who is liable to him on the first bill here: but that party is at all events liable to him for the difference; for as soon as the bill was dishonoured, the holder was entitled to redraw. That therefore is the period to look to. It ought not to depend on the rise or fall of the bill market, or exchange afterwards; for as he could not charge the increased difference by his own delay in waiting till the exchange grew more unfavourable to England before he drew, so neither could the party here fairly insist on having the advantage, if the exchange happened to be more favourable when the bill was actually drawn. Where re-exchange has been recovered on the dishonour of a foreign bill, it has not been usual to prove that in fact another bill was redrawn. If the quantum of damage is not to be ascertained by the existing rate of exchange at the time of the dishonour, the rule will became extremely complex for settling what is to be paid on the bill between different indorsees, each of whom takes it at the value of the exchange when he purchased it. If then the amount of the re-exchange between the two countries at the time of the dishonour be the true measure of damage which the holder at Liebon was entitled to receive from his indorsee in England, and that re-exchange consists of the amount of a bill on London, which would put the holder of the dishonoured bill in the same situation as if he had received the contents of it when due in Lisbon, it cannot make any difference whether the exchange between Lisbon and London at the time were carried on directly or through the medium of others. The more circuitous and difficult it was, the greater would be the loss of the holder by the dishonour.

IV. Reexchange. To what Amount.

We have before suggested the expediency of limiting the amount of reexchange either on the bill or indorsement (q). Where A. deposited a sum of money at the banking-house of B. in Paris, for which B. gave him his note payable in Paris, or, at the choice of the bearer, at the Union Bank in Dover, or at B.'s usual residence in London, according to the course of exchange upon Paris, and, after this note was given, the direct course of exchange between London and Paris ceased altogether, having been previously to its total cessation extremely low, and the note was at a subsequent period presented for acceptance and payment at the residence of B. in London, at which time there was a circuitous course of exchange on Paris by way of Humburgh, it was holden, that A. was entitled to recover on the note according to such circuitous course of exchange upon Paris at the time when the Where, however, acceptance or payment has been note was presented (r). rendered illegal by an act of this country, the drawer, &c. may not be liable to be sued on the bill(s); and we have already seen, that if a person draw a bill in a foreign country upon another in England, and it be protested for non-acceptance, the drawer will be discharged from liability to be sued in this country, by his having obtained a certificate of discharge, according to the law of the country where he drew the bill(t). Between this country and India it is not customary to make a distinct charge of re-exchange; but it has been the constant course with respect to bills for payment of pagodas in the East Indies, and returned protested to allow at the rate of 10s. per pagoda, and 5 per cent. after the expiration of thirty days from the notice to the defendant of the bill's dishonour, which includes interest, exchange, and all other charges (u), and by an arrangement entered into in 1822, between certain persons connected with the East India trade, 25 per cent. appears to have been considered a proper sum(x). But that arrangement could of course only bind the parties to it.

It appears from the case of Francis v. Rucker(y) that the drawer and indorser of bills drawn in Pennsylvania on any person in Europe, and returned protested for non-payment to that country, were then liable to the payment of 201. per cent. advance for the damage thereof. But the liability to pay re-exchange does not extend to the acceptor of a bill accepted in Eng-[ *687 ] land: he is only liable for the principal *sum, together with interest, according to the legal rate of interest where the bill is payable(z).

London and Lisbon, though bills had in some few instances been negotiated between them through Hamburgh and America about that period, the court refused to grant a new trial, on the presumption that the jury had found their verdict on the fact, that no re-exchange was found to their satisfaction to have existed between London and Lisbon at the time; the question having been properly left to them to allow damages in the name of re-exchange, if the plaintiff, who had indorsed the dishonoured bill to the holder, had either paid, or was liable to pay, re-exchange; and, saving the question of law, whether any exchange or re-exchange could be allowed between this and a country in the possession of the enemy. There cannot be any accumulation of re-exchange between several indorsers (b).

It appearing, in the present instance, that the bill had been retained in this country until 4001. had been paid, and that ultimately it had been sent back protested and dishonoured to the amount of 100l. only, no more than 25l. damages were allowed in that respect(c)(1).

*CHAPTER VII.

OF THE ACTION OF DEBT ON A BILL OR NOTE.

689 I. ADVANTAGES OF. II. BY WHOM MAINTAINABLE.

I. ADVANTAGES OF.

THE remedy by action of debt to enforce payment of a bill or note is to be I. Advanconsidered in this chapter.

The action of debt on simple contract was formerly much in use, but was Of the Acafterwards disused on account of the wager of law(a); wager of law, how-tion of ever, is now altogether abolished by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 13; and Bill or even before this statute the action of debt had become a common remedy Note. for the recovery of money due on simple contract(b). The principal advantages arising from adopting this remedy are, first, that the plaintiff need not, after judgment by default, execute a writ of inquiry, or refer it to the master to compute principal and interest; and, secondly, that the defendant must, since the 6 Geo. 4, c. 96, in debt on a bill of exchange, if there be no other count in the declaration on another simple contract, put in special bail on bringing a writ of error(c). But before that act, bail in error was not necessary on a judgment by default in debt on a promissory note, the validity of which instrument was not established until after the statute James I, c. 8(d). And if a declaration in debt on a bill of exchange contained any one count on a contract for which debt would not lie at the time of passing the statute 3 James 1, c. 8, bail in error was not necessary (e). simple contract was also not sustainable against executors or administrators(f), except in the Court of Exchequer, where wager of law was not allowed (g), or by special custom in the city of London (h), until the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 14, by which it is enacted, that an action of debt on simple contract shall be maintainable in any court of common law against any executor or administrator.

the maker, when expressed to be for value received(i)(1), or by the *drawer against the acceptor of a bill expressed to be for value received in goods(k), and by the payee of a foreign or inland bill of exchange expressed to be for value received against the drawer(l); and by the first indorsee against the first indorser, who was also the drawer of a bill payable to his own order(m)(2). In Bishop v. Young(n) the court observed, "We do not say how the case would stand, if the action were brought by any other person than him to whom the note was originally given, or against any other person than him by whom it was signed and made, or if the note itself did not express a consideration upon the face of it." And in a late case, on demurrer to a declaration in debt by the payee against the maker of a promissory note, stating for cause that it did not appear that the note was expressed to be for ralue receired, or anything equivalent thereto, the Court of Exchequer refused to set aside the demurrer as frivolous within the meaning of the rule 2 H. T. 4 Will. 4(o).

Debt is not sustainable on a collateral engagement, as on a promise to pay the debt of another (p); and it has been holden, that debt cannot be supported on a bill of exchange by the payer against the acceptor(q), or by the indorsec against the acceptor(r); therefore bail in error was not necessary upon a judgment in debt against the acceptor of a bill(s); first, because no privity of contract exists between those parties(t); and, secondly, because in an action of debt on simple contract, the consideration ought to be shewn, which is not stated in a declaration on a bill, and an acceptance is only in the nature of a collateral promise or engagement to pay, which creates no duty(u).

*CHAPTER VIII.

OF BANKRUPTCY, AND DISCHARGE UNDER INSOLVENT ACT.

In the preceding chapters our attention has been principally directed to the consideration of the remedies in cases where the parties to a bill, or other negotiable security, may be supposed to be solvent. In this chapter the rights and liabilities of the parties, and the course of proceeding in the case of bankruptcy, and of a discharge under an Insolvent Act, will be treated of In the first part we shall only consider so much of the law of bankruptcy as peculiarly relates to bills of exchange and other negotiable securities, and this depends on the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16(a), and the decisions on prior statutes applicable to that act. The statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 56(b), relates to the new court and the administration of the bankrupt law, and does not appear to alter the law itself, or at least any part of that connected with bills of exchange and promissory notes. The twelfth section of that act authorises the Lord Chancellor to issue a flat in lieu of a commission.

for the sake of profit, is a trading sufficient to subject a party to be made a I. The bankrupt, without other circumstances, if it be *general and not merely Trading occasional(d). This is founded on the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 2, which (re-[*693] pealing the 13 Eliz. c. 7, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 2, and all other acts) enacts, "That all persons using the trade of merchandize by way of bargaining, exchange, bartering, commission, consignment, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, and all persons who either for themselves, or as agents or factors for others, seek their living by buying and selling, or by buying and letting for hire, or by the workmanship of goods or commodities, shall be deemed traders, liable to become bankrupt(e)." Instances of this description do not often occur. In the case of Richardson v. Bradshaw(f), the bankrupt, Wilson, for several years received money from officers and other persons, and his cashier gave accountable notes for it, and these persons drew from time to time upon Wilson for such sums, payable either to bearer or order, as they thought proper; and this repeated dealing was held to be a trafficking in exchange, and a trading sufficient in itself to subject him to a commission of bankruptcy (g), upon the principle that persons of this description make merchandise of money and bills, and gain an extensive credit upon the profits of that course of dealing, in the same manner as other merchants and traders do by buying and selling, or using the trade of merchandize in gross, or by retail, with respect to other goods and moveable chattels(h). On the same principle, borrowing money abroad, for the purpose of repaying it in England at a certain rate of exchange, and repaying it by bills upon bankers in London, to whom foreign bills were remitted to make the payment, was held to be a trading(i). But an occasional drawing and redrawing bills of exchange, through for the sake of profit, as where it is done for the purpose of raising money to improve a person's own estate, or for other private occasions, will not render a person liable to the bankrupt laws(k). And the statutes relating to exchequer bills(l) expressly provide, that a party circulating the same shall not be deemed a trader within the bankrupt laws.

Bankers are expressly made subject to the bankrupt laws by the 6 Gco. Bankers. 4, c. 16, s. 2(m). And it has been held, that it is not necessary that a person, to be considered a banker, should keep an open shop(n); but it seems that an army or navy agent is not a banker(o).

Brokers are also subjected to the bankrupt laws by the same statute (p). Brokers. And it has been held that bill-brokers are within the act(q); but the dealer in accommodation bills without further evidence of trading as a bill-broker(r), or merely discounting a bill, and procuring bills to be discounted for friends, where the party does not hold himself out as a bill-broker, but has

But if a country trader, having had proceedings taken against him on a bill, promise to attend next day to pay the same, and instead of so doing go to London to procure friends, and write to the creditor informing him that this will prevent his keeping the appointment this will not be an act of bankruptcy by absenting himself, there being no intent to delay(z).

Remaining Abroad (a).

The 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 3, makes it an act of bankruptcy for the debtor to depart the realm, or being out of the realm to remain abroad, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors. And it has been held, that if a trader goes abroad, leaving a general power of attorney with his clerk to transact all his business for him, but provides no means of paying bills of exchange which fall due in his absence, he commits an act of bankruptcy, because such absence must necessarily delay his creditors (b).

Compounding with Petitioning Creditor.

The eighth section of that statute also makes it an act of bankruptcy for the trader to compound with the petitioning creditor after docket struck(c), either by the payment of money, or by giving or delivering to him any satis-

III. THE PETITIONING CREDITOR'S DEBT IN RESPECT OF A BILL OR NOTE.

Amount of.

With respect to the petitioning creditor's debt, when founded in part or the whole on a bill or note, there must be a debt, if to one creditor or firm, of 1001.; or if to two separate creditors, debts of 1501.; or if to more than two, debts of 2001. (o); and such debt must be independently of interest, unless it was expressly reserved, for otherwise interest is not a debt, but only in nature of damages, and cannot be added to the principal, so as to constitute? sufficient petitioning creditor's debt p). But if interest were specially made payable on the face of the instrument, it would be otherwise(p).

ton, 6 Bing. N. C. 296, ( 8 Scott, 583, S. C. ) the court, in laying it down as a general rule that a bill or note is to be presumed to have been made on the day on which it bears date, observed, "There is one exception to which there are several cases which apply; it is not necessary to go through them in detail; that is where a bill or note is produced for the purpose of proving a petitioning creditor's debt to sup port a proceeding in bankruptcy; in that case, though there may be some variation between the different decisions relating to that subject, I apprehend it may be taken to be now settled, that some evidence besides the date is necessary to shew that the instrument produced for that purpose had its existence before the act of bankruptcy took place. But the ground for requiring that proof appears to be a very reasonable and substantial one, which is this, that a proceeding in bankruptcy differs from an ordinary suit. The effect of a proceeding in bankruptcy is retrospective, and the object of it is to invalidate all transactions which have taken place between the act of bankruptcy and the time when the commission takes effect. In order, therefore, to support such an instrument bearing date before the act of bankruptcy, it may be necessary to give evidence in addition to the date."

parties(b); and though it was doubted at nini prime whether a bill of exchange is a good petitioning creditor's debt against the drawer, before it becomes due, or has been dishonoured by the acceptor(c), it has since been settled, that such a bill does constitute a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt, and that a commission may be issued against the drawer, although the bill was neither due nor had been presented for acceptance or payment, and though after the issuing of the commission, and when the bill became due, If two persons exchange acceptances, and the drawee had duly paid it (d). before the bills are mature, one of them commits an act of bankruptcy, there is not such a debt due from him as will sustain a commission(e). And a note, though absolute in its terms, but in fact given for securing a contingent debt, has been considered insufficient to support a commission(f). But this may be questionable, as verbal evidence is not admissible to defeat a bill absolute on the face of it(g).

It has been determined (h) that a bill of exchange to the precise amount of 1001., drawn and issued by a trader before an act of bankruptcy, but becoming due afterwards, is sufficient, after it has become due, to found a petition for a commission of bankrupt against him, though, allowing a rebate of interest, there was not, at the time of the act of bankruptcy, a debt of 100h; for the drawer contracts a debt the moment the bill is given. der of a bill or note to the amount of 1001. or upwards, though he may have bought it for less, is a creditor for that sum, and may issue a commission(i). But where a petitioning creditor's debt was created by his giving the bankrupt a check on the petitioning creditor's banker, it was held, that to establish the debt the payment of the check must be proved; that it was not sufficient (especially where the bankrupt's papers came to the hand of the petitioning creditor) to shew the check to have come to his hands again, and that his bankers, the day after the date of the check, paid on his account to the bankrupt's bankers, a sum corresponding with the amount in the check(k).

A creditor by a bill or note, made by the bankrupt before an act of bankruptcy, but not indorsed to the holder till after, is allowed to be a petitioning creditor; for this is a case in which the law allows the assignment of a chose in action, and the assignment relates to the original debt, and the assignee stands in the original creditor's place (l). For the same reason a creditor may, to a debt due to himself before, take a note of the bankrupt, indorsed to him after the bankruptcy, to make up a sum required by the statute: it being sufficient within the words of the act that there is an existing debt (of ther equisite amount) vested in the petitioning creditor at the time he [*699] petitions(m). case it must be proved, in order to support a commission, that the bill was III. The indorsed by the bankrupt to the petitioning creditor before the suing out of Petitioning Creditor's the commission; for otherwise the instrument might have been made just be- Debt. fore the commission for the express purpose of founding it (n). And where What Bills a trader accepted a bill to the amount of some goods, leaving a blank for and notes the creditor's name as drawer, and the creditor did not sign his name to it sufficient. until after he had sued out a commission against the acceptor, it was holden that the bill in this case was not sufficient as a positioning creditor's debt to support the commission (o).

This statute does not affect bills of exchange or other securities given or indorsed after the particular act of bankruptcy on which the commission is founded, in respect of which a person cannot, in general, be a petitioning creditor(p); and though the act enables persons to prove debts contracted after a secret act of bankruptcy, and before the commission, yet it does not authorise a creditor to strike a docket in respect of such a debt(q). the acceptor of an accommodation bill, who had paid the amount of it after an act of bankruptcy, to a person to whom it had been negotiated, was holden not to have a sufficient debt to support a commission(r); for though he might have proved, he could not strike a docket. The acceptance, however, of a security of a higher nature after an act of bankruptcy, does not prevent a creditor suing out a commission on a pre-existing debt(s). And if a creditor take a bill after an act of bankruptcy for a debt contracted before, drawn by the bankrupt upon one who had no effects in his hands at the time, or previous to the bill's becoming due, the original debt is not extinguished by want of notice to the drawer of the bill's having been dishonoured, and is sufficient to support a commission; for want of notice, though, in general, tantamount to a payment, is not so in this case, because having no effects in the drawee's hands, he cannot be injured (t).

The 18th section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, also enacts, "that if after adjudi-Proceedcation the debt or debts of the petitioning creditor or creditors or any of of insuffithem be found insufficient to support a commission, it shall be lawful for the ciency of Lord Chancellor, upon the application of any other creditor or creditor's Creditor's having proved any debt or debts sufficient to support a commission, provid- Debt. ed such debt or debts has or have been incurred not anterior to the debt or 6 Geo. 4. debts of the petitioning creditor or creditors, to order the said commission c. 16, e.18, to be proceeded in, and it shall by such order be deemed valid." Under this section, where a petitioning creditor's debt turns out to be insufficient to support a fiat, and the Chancellor orders the fiat to be proceeded in on proof of a sufficient debt by any other creditor, the debt of the second may be added to that of the first, to make up the requisite amount(11). of the proving creditor as a substitution for his own insufficient debt, under II. The Petitioning the 18th and 52d sections of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16(x).

By the 19th section of the act 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, it is declared that no commission shall be deemed invalid by reason of any prior act of bankruptcy, provided there be an act of bankruptcy subsequent to the petitioning The object of this section was to protect commissions regcreditor's debt. ularly sued out from being defeated by a prior act of bankruptcy. It should be observed, that this act does not, like the former (46 Geo. 3, c. 135, s. 4), contain the proviso that the petitioning creditor should have no notice of the prior act of bankruptcy, and for this reason the class of cases relating to such notice, and the requisites to support a prior commission, need not be Where a fiat has been issued founded on a bill of exchange of noticed(y). which the commissioner has refused the proof because the bill was fictitious, an assignee who has a sufficient debt to support the fiat ought not to petition to annul for want of a good petitioning creditor's debt, without praying for a new fiat (z).

In general, whatever objection would preclude the holder of a bill from recovering at law or in equity, will equally preclude him from issuing a commission of bankruptcy; for, as observed by Lord Chancellor Eldon, in the case of Ex parte Dewdney(a), "The meaning of the legislature in the bankrupt acts requiring the Lord Chancellor to give execution to all the creditors was, that this species of execution should be given to those creditors, who, if a commission had not issued, could by legal or equitable remedies have compelled payment." Hence it is necessary, in considering when a person may strike a docket or prove in respect of a bill of exchange, to keep in view the rules which have been stated in the previous part of this work, as well as those more particularly relating to this part of the subject.

Where the laches or conduct of the holder have deprived him of his remedy at law against the trader, who has committed an act of bankruptcy, it will be equally incompetent to him to strike a docket. And, in general, if the commission be against the drawer or indorser of a bill, it must be established that he had due notice of non-payment, the same as in an action(b); but proof that after an act of bankruptcy he admitted that he knew the bill would not be paid, will suffice(c). It was held in the case of Mann v. Shepherd (d), that if a creditor, knowing that his debtor has committed an act of bankruptcy, receive part of his debt, the payment is void, and the original debt remains in force, and will support a commission, founded on the petition of such creditor. But a debt which could not be recovered in an action, in consequence of a plea of the statute of limitations, nor in equity by analogy to it, will not be sufficient to support a commission, or he proveable under it(e). So where the bankrupt entered into a deed of composi-[ *701 ] tion with *his creditors, by which they released him from his debts, it was

In the second section it is enacted, "That all and every person or persons who now are or shall become bankrupts, shall be discharged of and from all and every such bond, note, or other security as aforesaid, and shall have the benefit of the several statutes now in force against bankrupts, in like manner, to all intents and purposes, as if such sum of money had been due and payable before the time of his becoming a bankrupt."

The subsequent statute, 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 22, was considered as a legc. 30, c. 22. islative construction of the 7 Geo. 1, c. 31, and to confine that statute to 49 Geo. 3, written securities (q). But by the 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 9, its remedies c. 121, s. 9. were extended to all persons giving credit before the bankruptcy.

By the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 51, these provisions were consolidated 6 Geo. 4. c. 16, s. 51. and re-enacted as follows: "That any person who shall have given credit to the bankrupt, upon valuable consideration, for any money or other matter or thing whatsoever, which shall not have become payable when such bankrupt committed an act of bankruptcy, and whether such credit shall have been given upon any bill, bond, note, or other negotiable security, or not, shall be entitled to prove such debt, bill, bond, note, or other security, as if the same was payable presently, and receive dividends equally with the other creditors, deducting only thereout a rebate of interest for what he shall so receive, at the rate of five per cent. to be computed from the declaration of a dividend to the time such debt would have become payable, according to the terms upon which it was contracted."

*Upon this section of the 6 Geo. 4, the proof of a bill of exchange, &c. [ *703 ] under a fiat, may be considered under the following heads:

1. What bill, note, or check, may be proved.

2. Who may prove.

3. Against whom, and under what fiat.

4. For what sums, or to what extent, the proof may be made.

5. The time of proof, and of making claims.

IV. Proof of Bills.

1. What Bills, &c.; proveable.

From the judgment of Lord Eldon in the case of Ex parte Dewdney(r), 1. What it may be collected, that wherever a bill of exchange or other negotiable se-Bills, &c. curity would be valid at law, so as to support an action, it may be proved under a fiat; and on the other hand, it appears to be a general rule, that a bill not available at law or in equity cannot be proved under a fiat. fore when the remedy at law had been lost by the operation of the statute of limitations, it was considered that the bill or note could not be proved(s). But in a subsequent case it was considered that the holder might prove in respect of a bill or note, although his claim thereon would be barred at law by the statute of limitations, provided it were not so barred when the commission issued(t). A bill founded upon a consideration, rendering it absolutely void by some statute, cannot be proved even by a bona fide holder(u); and whenever the holder himself has received the bill upon any illegal contract, he cannot, in general, prove such bill in respect of the consideration(x); and the assignees and creditors have a right to insist that the whole security is void, and unless they submit to pay what is really due, the court cannot order it, and frequently applications of that sort have been refused (y). where the holder has received the bill or note without any knowledge of the illegality of the consideration, he will be entitled to prove it, except in the cases above mentioned, where the legislature has declared the bill absolute-And we have already seen, that by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 41, bills and notes given for considerations arising out of gaming, usurious, and certain other illegal transactions, are to be deemed to have been given for an illegal consideration, and will, therefore, be proveable in the hands of an indorsee for value who had no notice of the illegality (a).

*In Ex parte Bulmer(b), where promissory notes given by a stock-broker [ *704 ] for the balance of an account of money advanced to him to be employed in stock-jobbing transactions, contrary to the Stock-Jobbing Act, and part of the consideration consisted of the profits upon those transactions, and the residue for money received, which he had applied to his own use, Lord Erskine would not permit the petitioner to prove the promissory notes as binding obligations, as the consideration for them was made up, though in a very

Petitioners, in December, 1824, applied to prove, under a commission which issued 10th July 1810, two promissory notes, both dated 21st May, 1810. The commissioners rejected the proof, on the ground that more than six years had elapsed since the issuing of the commission, and since the notes became due. On petition, Leach, Vice Chancellor, held that the claim of the petitioner was not barred, because the commission was a trust for the benefit of all the creditors, and the statute does not run against a trust; and he referred it back to the commissioners to receive the proof. On appeal, Lord Lyndharst, Chancellor, agreed in opinion with the Vice Chancellor, and affirmed his or-small part, of the fruit of the illegal use of the money lodged with the bankrupt, but allowed the petitioner to prove the sum applied by the bankrupt to his own use as money had and received.

1. Wbat Bills, &c.

Where the consideration of the bill consists of two parts, one bad and the proveable. other good, and no statute declares that the bill, under such circumstances, shall be absolutely void, the rule in equity as well as in bankruptcy is, that the security shall avail as to what was good. And, therefore, where a broker having been employed to effect some insurances, one of which was illegal (being on a voyage from Ostend to the East Indies), the principal, in consideration of the money laid out in effecting them, indorsed to him a bill drawn by himself, and payable to his own order, upon and accepted by a person who afterwards became a bankrupt, the broker (the indorsee) was not allowed to prove under the commission issued against the acceptor, in respect of such part of the debt as arose on the illegal insurance, but it was held he might prove for the rest on the bill itself(c). Where there has been an antecedent legal debt, and a bill is afterwards taken, but which turns out to be invalid, the demand for the antecedent debt may be resorted to and proved(d).

In regard to the form of the bill, or the mode of acceptance or transfer, the same objections which would in general preclude the holder of a bill from suing at law would equally prevent him from proving under a commis-Thus a bill or note on an improper stamp is not proveable (f). But a bill or note payable at a certain time, or on demand, is proveable, though the demand be not made till after the act of bankruptcy(g). So, where a promissory note payable with interest twelve months after notice was expressed to be "for value received," and the maker became bankrupt before any notice was given, it was held the payee might prove it under the commission, because the payment was not contingent(h). If, however, a bill or note be payable on a contingency, rendering it void at law, it cannot So with regard to the acceptance, it must be of such a nabe proved(i). ture that the party might have supported an action. We have seen, that before [ *705 ] the 1 & 2 Geo. 4, it was held (k) that a letter, undertaking to accept bills *already drawn, was an acceptance, and that the bills might be proved as accepted; and though that act requires a written acceptance of inland bills, it is still otherwise as to foreign bills (l). The indorsement also is governed by the same rules in bankruptcy as in an action; and therefore, in re Barrington v. Burton(m), where B. handed over a negotiable note for valuable consideration to G., not indorsing it, but giving a written acknowledgment on a separate paper, to be accountable for the note to G., and G. indorsed the note, which,

What have the amount made an item in the account between B. and G. and to Bille, &c. stand in the place of the latter (n). So a written undertaking guaranteeing the proveable. payment of a note of a third person, not due at the time of the act of bankruptcy, is not a debt proveable(o). But where the guarantee becomes absolute before the bankruptcy, or, it should seem, where, since the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 56, the contingency happens between the issuing of the flat and the tender of proof, it is otherwise (p). And where a party accepted bills under the following document given by H. S., on behalf of his agents L. and Co. -" In consequence of your allowing Messrs. L. to draw on you to the extent of 12,000l., I hereby guarantee to you that amount, it being understood that payment of these drafts is to be provided for by myself, or Messrs. L. in direct discountable bills fourteen days at least before they fall due, &c." and H. S. became bankrupt before some of the bills became due, it was held that there was a debt proveable, such document amounting to an original undertaking, and not a mere guarantee (q).

Bills made payable to fictitious payees may be proved by the indorsees for a valuable consideration against the acceptor, or any party who knew at the time that the payee was a fictitious person(r). And where a party who has become bankrupt has transferred a bill, but has by mistake omitted to indorse it, he or his assignees may be compelled to indorse, so as to enable the holder to prove(s). A bill which has been lost before or after it is due, may be proved, upon the parties giving a sufficient indemnity to the satisfaction of the commissioners (t). And where a bill is exhibited at the time of proving, and afterwards is bond fide lost, the commissioner should give special directions dispensing with its production, on application for a di-

Wherever the holder of a bill has been guilty of such laches or conduct as would discharge the party at law, supposing he had continued solvent, they will equally preclude the holder from proving under a *fiat against [ *706] him(x). It has been held, that a holder who has not given notice himself to the drawer, cannot avail himself of notice given by any other person (y); but it is now settled that notice from any party to the bill or note will be sufficient (z). been extinguished at law or in equity by the statute of limitations, it was once held, that the holder will not be allowed to prove under a commission(a), but this doctrine has been qualified (b).

1. What Bills, &c. proveable.

Where a bill has been paid, or considered as cancelled or settled by another bill, it cannot be proved. But the presumption that a bill when in the hands of the acceptor has been paid, is not sufficient to oust the holder of proof on a bill, which comes through the acceptor, where there is no fraud(c). And bills in lieu of which other bills are given, if permitted to remain with the holder, may be proved in the event of the latter bills not being paid, and of no laches with respect to the latter having been committed (d).

Where the husband receives a fortune with the wife, and gives a bond to pay a sum to her trustees "in case of bankruptcy," a note given for the amount on the eve of bankruptcy, creates a debt proveable(e). So a promissory note to trustees for money lent out of the trust property is proveable; and if the trustees are responsible to the wife they may also prove for interest, but not otherwise (f).

2. Who may Prove.

2. Who may prove.

With respect to the person who may prove a bill, we will consider first, the proof by a person who, being the holder, gave value for it at the time it became so; and secondly, the proof by a person who did not originally give value for the bill, but has since been compelled to pay it.

Holder of Bill for value.

The bona fide holder of a bill or note, made originally for a valuable consideration, may prove for the whole sum contained in it, either against the acceptor, the drawer, or indorsers, whether the bill was due or not at the time of the act of bankruptcy, deducting a rebate of interest(g); but he must be holder for his own use, not as trustee for another indebted to the estate(h); though under a fiat against a banker, one person will be allowed to prove on behalf of a large number of holders of small notes, he not interfering in the choice of assignces, or with the certificate(i). And an agent for a public company abroad may, to the prejudice of the bankrupt, prove, with the consent of the assignees, on behalf of the company, on bills of exchange(j). When a bill or note is drawn before, but indorsed after the secret act of bank-[ *707 ] ruptcy *of the acceptor to another person, the indorsee, (though before the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, he could not set off the amount of the sum payable to any demand on him by the assignees, because the statute 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, related only to mutual debts due before the bankruptcy (i), may be a petitioning creditor for the amount, or prove it under the flut, because he stands IV. Proof in the place of the person from whom he received the instrument; and the of Bills, debt is not created by the indorsement, but by the acceptance of the bill, or &c. making of the note (k); nor will the circumstance of a note being indersed 2. Who may prove after it was due make any difference(1). And if an indorser or drawer of a Holder of bill for a valuable consideration, take up and pay the whole bill after the bank-Bill for ruptcy of the acceptor, or of any other party liable to him on the bill, and Value. the bill has not been proved by some previous holder under the fat against such acceptor or other party, such indorser or drawer is entitled to prove it under the flat against the acceptor or such other party (m); and it has even been decided, that where the bankrupt had accepted a bill for the accommodation of the drawer, and the indorser had indorsed the bill also for the accommodation of such drawer, and had paid it after the bankruptcy, he might prove it under the commission against such acceptor (n). So in the case of Ex parte Hale(0) it was decided, that the acceptor becoming bankrupt, and the petitioner having indorsed it before the bankruptcy, took up the bill, he might prove under such commission. And it has been held, that if an acceptor for the honour of the drawer, after the bankruptcy of the original acceptor, pay the bill, he may prove it under the commission against such original acceptor(p). But this latter doctrine was over-ruled in the case of Ex parte Lambert(q), in which it was decided, that such acceptor supra protest could not prove under the commission against the original acceptor, where the latter had received no consideration from the drawer. And, in general, the person thus claiming to prove must have contracted a liability upon the bill before the date of the fiat(r).

If the holder of a bill prove it, and receive dividends under the flat against the acceptor, and also under a fiat against another party, the assignces of the latter cannot prove under the fiat against the acceptor the amount of the dividends so paid by them; upon this point all the judges agreed, in the case of Cowley v. Dunlop(s), for the same debt cannot be proved twice under the same flat, and there is no hardship *upon the indorser whose estate has [ *708] also been compelled to pay a dividend, because it cannot exceed the deficiency of the amount of the bill beyond the dividend paid by the acceptor, and such deficiency would be the very sum which the indorser would have lost, had he been the holder of the bill. And where a creditor, after the issuing of the fiat, assigns his debt (bills of exchange), this does not give the

IV. Proof assignee a right to prove it, but merely a right to call upon the assignor to prove the debt as a trustee for the assignee(t).

Holder of dation Bill.

With respect to an accommodation bill, or a bill where one of the parties Accommo- may have subscribed his name without having received any value, many difficulties very frequently arise as to the right of the parties to prove. A party who has bona fide given a valuable consideration for such bill, we have seen, is not affected by the want of consideration between other parties(u), and consequently may prove under a commission against such other parties(z). So a party with whom bills accepted for the accommodation of the drawer are deposited as a security for advances, may prove the full amount under a flat against the acceptor (y). But a party who has not given value for the bill, but has, since the act of bankruptcy, been obliged to take it up, frequently stands in a different situation, and in many cases has been considered as unable to prove under the fiat, on the ground that he is not clothed with the rights of the bona fide holder, nor can justly swear that the bankrupt was indebted to him at the time of his bankruptcy. The rules upon this subject may be arranged under the following heads:-

First, Where there is cross paper exchanged between the parties to the accommodation, and each to pay his own acceptances, &c.

Secondly, Where accommodation party has taken a security. Thirdly, Where accommodation party has no security.

1. When he has paid before the bankruptcy.

2. When he has not paid till after bankruptcy.

3. When he may compel holder to prove for his benefit.

Fourthly, When he may prove under the 52d section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which comprises the statute 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8.

First. Cross Bills.

First, If a bill of exchange or promissory note be given expressly in consideration of another bill or note, and in exchange, the consideration is valid, and the holder may prove it under a fiat of bankruptcy(z): and where bills or notes are exchanged, the doctrine of suretyship does not apply; for each acceptor of the bill, or maker of the note, in such case engages to pay his own acceptance or note(a). But mere reciprocal acceptances to accommodate each other, without specific exchange, will not create a debt on either side, or any right to prove before the party has actually paid, except indeed the case can be brought within the 52d section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16(b). [ *709 ] Whether there *was an exchange of bills, and one bill was transferred in consideration of the other, must be determined by the particular circumstances of such case(c). The bills need not be payable at the same time(d), or for the same sums(e), but any variation in the times of payment or in the IV. Proof sums of the respective bills is evidence whether the parties did or did not of Billa, transfer the bills in consideration of each other. And it seems, that an agreement by each party to pay his own acceptance, is conclusive evidence 2. Who may prove. that the bills were given in consideration of each other (f). The consideration of the bill, for this purpose, may be an acceptance of the party to Cross Bills. whom it is transferred(g), or the acceptance of another person(h), or a promissory note (i).

There is a material difference, however, between the right of such a party to a bill to prove it, and that of a person who has actually advanced a valuable consideration for a bill. The latter is entitled, without qualification, to prove and receive a dividend immediately in equal proportion with the other creditors (k); but the former, though he is, by the present practice, entitled to prove the cross bill before he has taken up his own(l), yet the dividends will be withheld until the account relative to the cross bill has been finally settled and adjusted (m). Thus if A. gives an accommodation bill to B., which B. gives to C. in exchange for an accommodation bill given by C. to B., and the three become bankrupt, A.'s bill is proveable by the assignees of C. against the estate of A., but the dividend will be reserved (n). A person who has accepted a bill in consideration of the drawer's accepting a cross bill, and where it is understood that each party shall pay his own acceptances, cannot prove under a fiat against such drawer any payment made on his own acceptance, either before or after the bankruptcy of the drawer, there being no implied contract of indemnity, in the case of such cross acceptances; but each party is considered as looking to the liquidation of his claim on the other by the bill which he took in lieu of his own, and his remedy thereon, and to those only; in which case the law will not raise any implied promise ultra the bills(a). The party, as acceptor, has no remedy against the drawer for payment of his own acceptances, because he did not accept in consideration of a promise of indemnity, but in consideration *of [ *710 ] an agreement, or rather of an actual and executed delivery of other acceptances to the same, or nearly the same amount (p). And consequently, in these cases of cross acceptance, the payment made by a party on his own acceptance cannot be proved under a fiat against the other acceptor, although no payment whatever has been made by the latter on his acceptance, the only reinedy being on the cross bill(q). It has been held, that if a person become a bankrupt, and the dealings between the bankrupt and a creditor consist of cross bills, which are respectively dishonoured, and a cash account composed of payments in money and of payments on bills duly honoured, all the dishonoured bills must be struck out on both sides, and only the cash balance be proved under the fat(r). But this doctrine has since been qualified, and it has been held, that although where part of an account between two mercantile houses, which become bankrupt, consists on both sides of bills which may be proved against both estates, the cash balance as between the two houses is proveable, excluding the bills outstanding in both sides, yet in the event of a surplus, the bills on both sides are to be included in the account(s). And if the drawer of a bill accepted in consideration of his own acceptance, take up and pay the whole bill after the bankruptcy of the acceptor, and the bill has not been proved by the holder under the fiat, such drawer may prove it(t); though if the assignees of the drawer of a bill, accepted in consideration of his own acceptance, pay dividends to the holder, who also receives dividends under the fiat against the acceptor, the drawer cannot prove the amount of such dividends under the latter fiat (u). Where there are cross acceptances, and the right of set-off clear, the court will restrain the assignces from bringing an action (x).

Secondly, Where Accommodation Party has taken

Secondly. Besides these cases of cross paper, a party to an accommodation bill frequently receives by way of indemnity a bill or note. If an accommodation acceptor, or other party, who puts his name to a bill without having received value, take at the same time from the principal or party accommodated, by way of indemnification, a bill or note for a sum of money payable at a day certain, he will be allowed to prove immediately upon such counter security, though the debtor becomes a bankrupt before such counter security is payable, and before the surety himself has paid or been called upon, or even could, by the terms of his engagement, be called upon to pay the creditor(y); and this notwithstanding the counter security has been negotiated by the [ *711 ] party *and returned to him after the bankruptcy(z). It has been observed, that such a construction, however it may appear to a common apprehension repugnant to the real truth of the transaction, and the real justice of the case as between the parties, has been founded upon this, that such a counter security creates an absolute debt at law, for which the surety's liability is a sufficient consideration, and on which, therefore, he is entitled immediately to come in as a creditor under the commission. With a view, however, to prevent the injury which might be done to real creditors, by allowing such constructively absolute but really contingent creditors to receive dividends

But see Ex parte Solarte and others, 2 Dea. & Chit. 261. K. and Co. sent to A. five bills drawn by them on D. and S., and received from him in return his acceptances for the precise amount, which they discounted with their own bankers, but none of them being paid by A (who became bankrupt himself before they fell due) they were proved by the holders under K. and Co.'s commission: A. having never negotiated the five bills sent him by K. and Co., it was held that his assignces could not prove them under K. and Co.'s commission.

upon debts which may never exist but in law, it has been thought necessary, IV. Proof where there are cross demands between the surety and the bankrupt upon of Bills, counter paper, as it is called, and upon which, till either has actually paid, 2. Who they are substantially only sureties, though nominally creditors of each other, 2. WHO may prove. to suspend the dividends till it appear that the surety has actually paid, Secondly, and how far he has exonerated the bankrupt's estate from his own paper(a). Where Ac-

A security of this nature must be a bill, note, or bond, payable at all commodaevents, and not a mere parol or written undertaking to indemnify (b). A tion Party promissory note payable on demand, or a bill payable at all events, are suffiseeurity cient securities to enable a party to prove, though no demand has been made before the act of bankruptcy(c). But if the acceptor of a bill receive from the drawer an undertaking to indemnify, or a receipt for his acceptance, as for money received, this is not such a counter security as creates a debt capable of being proved(d). In Ex parte Metcalfe(e), where A. and B. became bankrupts, the assignees of B. were allowed to prove under the commission against A. a cash balance due from A. to B., but the dividends were ordered to be retained to reimburse the estate of A. what it should be compelled to pay upon a distinct transaction, viz. a loan of bills from A. to B., some of which had been dishonoured, so that the money, thus in the hands of A., was in the nature of a cross security and indemnification against the accommodation paper. So in the case of Willis v. Freeman(f), Lord Ellenborough said, that Wilkins v. Casey(g) had established, that if a man, who has funds in his hands belonging to a trader who has committed a secret act of bankruptcy, accept a bill for that trader without knowing of such act of bankruptcy, he may apply those funds, when the bill becomes due, to the discharge of his own acceptance, though a commission of bankruptcy may have issued in the interim, and will be protected against any claims the assignees may afterwards make upon him in respect of the funds so applied.

It is not necessary in all cases that the security to the accommodating party should be given expressly as an indemnity. Thus it was held in the case of Ex parte Bloxham(h), that bankers, who have accepted bills for the accommodation of the bankrupt, may prove upon the bills drawn by him and remitted to them in the course of their banking *account, though their [ *712] acceptances were not due at the time of the bankruptcy; and it being objected, that the acceptance, was not such a consideration as gave the bankers a right to prove upon the bills deposited but not due till after the bankruptcy, and when the banker accepted, not having bills, but bills were deposited afterwards to indemnify him, that is not such a giving credit as falls within the statute 7 Geo. 1, c. 31, (the provisions of which are included in the 51st section of the 6 (Ico. 4, c. 16,) and that in Ex parte Maydwell, the acceptance was upon the express credit of the note, and that consequently this case was distinguishable; the Lord Chancellor said, that "in Ex parte Maydwell it was held, that the liability by the acceptance was a good consideration for the promissory note, and the proof was permitted. 2. Who may prove. Secondly, Where Action Party security.

IV. Proof demonstrating some mischief in that doctrine: the party proving, but not take ing up his own acceptance; and the Lord Chancellor afterwards put that condition upon them, that they should take up their acceptances. Upon this sort of transaction, bankers accepting upon the credit of bills remitted from the country; they must be entitled to prove, but they should prove upon the securities.

Where a person has become a party to a bill or note for the accommodacommoda- tion of another, and has been obliged to pay it after the bankruptcy, he may set off such payment against a debt due from him to the bankrupt at the time has taken a of his bankruptcy (i), and now at the time of issuing the commission. But this is a case of mutual credit under the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, which will be hereafter more fully considered.

Thirdly, curity.

Thirdly. Where a person has become an accommodation party to a bill Where Accommoda- or note, though there is neither cross paper nor a security in his hands to intion Party demnify him, yet if he has paid the bill before the act of bankruptcy of his has no Se-principal, it is proveable under the fiat as money paid for his use(k).

1. When ruptcy, and 2. When paid till after Bankruptcy.

But if he paid such bill or note after the act of bankruptcy of his princihe has paid the Bill be- pal, he cannot, in general, prove under a fiat, unless he can avail himself of fore Bank- the provisions in the statute 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8, (which are repeated in the 52d clause of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16(l). This is perfectly clear in the case of an accommodation acceptor, or maker of a note, who being the parhe has not ties primarily liable can have no remedy upon them. Thus where a person accepted a bill to accommodate the drawer, upon a parol promise by the latter to find money to take it up when due, and to save the acceptor harmless, but who did not take it up when it became due, and soon after was a bankrupt, and the acceptor, after the bankruptcy of the drawer, was sued upon the bill and taken in execution for the debt and costs, it was held, that no debt accrued to him from the drawer till he paid the debt and costs, or (which was the same thing as actual payment) till he rendered his body in satisfaction thereof, and this not being till after the bankruptcy, could not be [ *713 ] proved under the commission against the drawer(m). And *it makes no difference if, instead of a parol promise, the surety takes a promise in writing from the drawer that he will take up the bill when due(n).

Q uestion Accommodorser could

The right, however, of an indorser of a bill or note, who has become so whether an merely for the accommodation of another, and has paid the bill after the dation In- bankruptcy, seems not to have been perfectly settled (o), though since provided for by the 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8, and the present act 6 Geo. 4, c. Buttivant, 3 East, 72, (Chit. j. 659). are referred to; and it is suggested that the whole question is, whether the payee and drawer stood in the situation of principal and surely. In Cowley v. Dunlop, Lawrence, J. speaking of the case of Brook's v. Rogers, says, "I argued that case as being the case of principal and surety, and considered Brooks as lending his name to Rogers to get money on the draft of Rogers of the Olney bank, and that, in sabstance, it was an advance of money to Rogers payee of a bill of exchange, not being a creditor of the drawer, indorsed IV. Proof and got it discounted, merely for the purpose of raising money for him, and of Bille, handed the money to him, and was afterwards obliged to pay it to the indorsee, but not till after the drawer became a bankrupt, he could not prove may prove. it under the drawer's commission; because no debt accrued to him from the Accommodrawer till the money was actually paid, which was not till after the bank- dation Inruptcy. In the case of Howis v. Wiggins (r), where a party became payee dorser. and indorsee of a promissory note for the accommodation of the maker, who delivered it to a third person with the payee's indorsement, and afterwards became bankrupt, it was held that the payee and indorser, paying it after the bankruptcy, was not entitled to prove, his debt accruing only upon payment of the note(s). In the case of Howle v. Baxter(t), the bill had been accepted by the bankrupt for the accommodation of the drawer, *and the [ *714 ] plaintiff, at the request of the drawer, indorsed the bill, merely to give it additional credit, after which the drawer got it discounted, and the acceptor became bankrupt, and the plaintiff was afterwards obliged to pay the amount to a bona fide holder, after which the defendant obtained his certificate, and the court said, that the plaintiff contracted no liability at the defendant's request, and that he never became surety for him in this transaction, and that the plaintiff's demand against the defendant, the acceptor, arose solely upon the bill, and that there was nothing to prevent his proving it under the commission, and consequently that the bankrupt was discharged by his certificate (u).

It is submitted, that where the party from being acceptor of the hill or maker of the note was primarily liable, and could not have any claim by why Invirtue of the instrument itself upon any party to it, there were sufficient dorser grounds for his not being allowed to prove under the commission; because, ought to have been independently of 7 Geo. 1, c. 31, no person could prove, unless he had a allowed to subsisting legal demand actually payable at the time of the bankruptcy (x), prove.

on the credit of Brooks's name as surety to the bank; but I doubt if that argument is not fallacious; for on Brooks carrying the bill to the bank, the bank lent him the amount of it on the security of the bill, on which Brooks was entitled to recover when returned to him for nonpayment."

(r) Howis r. Wiggins, 4 T R. 714, (Chit. j. 496); Bayl. 5th edit. 421, 422. Mr. Montagu, in vol. i. 155, note (e), observes on this decision, "that it is a stronger case of principal and surely than the case of Brooks v. Rogers, 1 Hen. Bla. 640, (Chit. j. 480), above mentioned, because in Howis r. Wiggins no money consideration passed between the payee and maker before the bankruptcy of the latter. And see the argument in Howle v. Baxter, 3 East, 177, (Chit. j. 664). In Cowley v. Dunlop, 7 T. R. 565, (Chit. j. 598), Grose, J. say, "The case of Howis v. Wiggins came on before this court on a motion for a new trial; and possibly under a misapprehension of it, I considered it as a case of indemnity; and the ground on which the rule was refused was, on the sup-position that Vanderhayden and De Paiba, which was a case of indemnity, was in point. I then considered Howis the plaintiff, and payee of the two promissory notes, as having indorsed them as surety for the defendant, with a view to give credit to the notes, and without any consideration given to him for his so doing. In any other way of considering that case, I think it is not to be supported." It was also observed by Lord Ellenborough, in Buckler r. Buttivant, 3 East, 82, (Chit. j. 659), "It is unnecessary to say any thing of the cases of Brooks r. Rogers, and Howis r. Wiggins, though I have a decided opinion on the subject; it is sufficient for the present to observe that the noble lord by whom the former of those cases was determined, afterwards changed his opinion in the case of Ex parte Seddon, and that the latter case has since been doubted in this court by some of the judges in Cowley v. Dun. lop." It is observable, however, that the case of Ex parte Seddon, cited in 7 T. R. 570, is distinguished from Brooks v. Rogers, and Howis r. Wiggins, for Seddon was not allowed to prove on his own paper, but on the note given to him in exchange for it, which rendered that case an instance of cross paper, or counter security, which (it has never been disputed) may be proved; Bayl. 5th edit. 421, 422.

cause he being the person primarily liable to pay such bill or note, could not be considered as a person giving credit on such securities within the meaning of that statute. But a person who had indorsed a bill at the request of another might fairly be considered as giving credit within the meaning of the statute, which enabled "any person who shall give credit upon such securities to any person or persons who shall become bankrupts upon a good and valuable consideration for any sum or sums of money, or other matter or thing whatsoever, which shall not be due at the time of the bankruptcy," to prove such The question seems to have been, whether such an accommodation indorser could be considered as a person giving credit on such securities for "money, for other matter or thing," within the meaning of the stat-Now we have seen that in the case of cross bills, the acceptance on one side is deemed a sufficient consideration for the acceptance on the other, to enable a party liable to pay his own acceptance to prove the acceptance of the other party under the commission of those who had become bankrupt(y); and that where there had not been an exchange of bills, yet if a bill or note payable at all events had been given by way of indemnity, it might be proved(z); and we have seen that when a bill had been taken up by an inderser, who became so for valuable consideration, although after the act of bankruptcy, he may prove under the commission(a). If the acceptance of a cross bill, or the holding of a bill or note by way of indemnity, is to be deemed a sufficient consideration to enable the party to prove the bill or note in his possession, it must be on the ground that his liability on that paper, which he himself is bound to take up, is a good and sufficient consideration for "other matter or thing" besides money, within the meaning of the stat-The decision in Howle v. Baxter(b) was only susute 7 Geo. 1, c. 31. tainable upon this ground, for in that case the plaintiff had neither advanced money or credit in the way of trade before the bankruptcy, and was merely an accommodation party, who had afterwards paid the bill. It is true that [ *715 ] the *words in the preamble of the 7 Geo. 1, c. S1, afforded only a presumption of an intention in the legislature to assist those merchants and traders who were obliged to sell their goods on trust or credit, and take bills or notes in payment for them; but the preamble could not control the express enacting words, "for money, or for other matter or other thing whatsoever(c)." There appears to be no substantial difference in this respect between a transaction where, in consideration of a party's indursing a bill, he receives another bill or note by way of indemnity, which it is admitted be may prove, and a transaction, in which a drawer or indorser hands over a bill or note in his possession to the same party and obtains his indorsement by way of giving credit to the instrument, without giving such cross security. In the latter case, according to the decision in Howle v. Baxter(d), the principle of which appears to have over-ruled the cases of Howis v. Wiggins, and Brooks v. Rogers) the transaction implied, that in consideration of the accommodating party becoming so, the party accommodated gives to ties for a raluable consideration, where the time of payment is certain, though postponed to a future day, and several cases are collected to prove this position. But it is observable that the section alluded to only mentions securities for their money payable at a future day, by which they are embled to prove their debts. and consequently the words of the statute are less general than are supposed.

(c) In Co. B. L. 188, it is observed, that there is a legislative construction of this very act in 5 Geo 2, c. 30, s. 22, which, without conceiving a doubt, takes it for granted that the statute is not merely confined to securities for goods sold and delivered in the course of trade, but that it extends generally to all personal securi-

This, however, was a question of &c. considerable difficulty and could not be considered as fully settled(e) until 2. Who may prove. the passing of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 52(f).

In a recent case, it appeared that the defendant, on certain considerations, detion Inundertook to pay a balance due on a bill of exchange of which the plaintiff dorser. was the acceptor; and he afterwards by a new undertaking engaged to deliver up the acceptance to the plaintiff within a month or to indemnify him against it; defendant became bankrupt, and did not pay or give any indemnity, and the plaintiff was obliged to take up the bill, the bankrupt having then obtained his certificate; and in an action brought by the plaintiff for the breach of such promise, it was held, that he could not have proved in respect of it under the defendant's commission, either for a debt not payable at the time of bankruptcy, or for a contingent debt, or in the character of a surety, and that therefore the bankruptcy and certificate were no defence (g).

IV. Proof against the principal(o). Where, however, a banker having money of the bankrupt's in his hands, has paid it after notice of the act of bankruptcy, though to creditors whose debts were antecedent, and who would have been entitled to prove under the fiat, yet he will not be permitted to stand in the place of those creditors so paid, and to receive dividends thereon with the other creditors (p).

In Ex parte Mathews(q) it was held, that if the drawer of a bill take up and pay the whole bill, after the indorser has proved it under the commission against the acceptor, the drawer has an equitable right to the benefit of the proof made by the indorser. If the payment by the surety be after the bankruptcy of the principal, and before the creditor has proved the debt, it cannot be proved either by the creditor or by the surety; the creditor, cannot, in such case, prove, because he cannot swear to an existing debt, and the surety cannot prove, because his payment is after the bankruptcy (r). It is therefore in general advisable for an accommodation party to compel the holder of the bill to prove before he pays him the amount. When such proof has been made, and in consequence of the party proving having afterwards received his debt from the surety, such proof has been expunged, it may, in in some cases, at the instance of the surety, be reinstated for his benefit(s). But the creditor cannot be turned into a trustee for the surety, to the prejudice of any right the former may have against the principal debtor's estate, on a further and distinct demand; and in such case the surety will only be allowed such part of the dividend as will remain, after allowing out of it to the creditor as much as will make up the proportion which he would have received, upon the residue of the debt proved beyond the debt to the surety, [ 717] if this debt has been *expunged(t). Thus, in the case of Ex parte Turner(u), the petitioner had lent his name by acceptance and indorsement for the accommodation of the bankrupt, who discounted the bills so accepted and indorsed with Snaith and Co. After the bankruptcy, upon the application of Snaith and Co., the petitioner paid the full value of those bills, amounting to 8151. 15s. to them. They were creditors of the bankrupt to a much larger amount, and they proved their whole demand, including the amount of the bills received from the petitioner. The petitioner prayed that Snaith and Co. might assign to them the dividends due upon the proofs in respect of the bills which he had paid. The Lord Chancellor observing that Snaith and Co. could not be turned into trustees to the prejudice of any right they may have, made the order, that Snaith and Co. should take out of the dividend upon the 8151. 15s. so much as would make up the proportion, which they would have received upon the residue of the debt proved beyond the 8151. 15s. if that debt of 8151. 15s. had been expunged, and the rest of the dividend upon the 8151. 15s. belonged to the petitioner: and that the dividend should remain in the hands of the assignees, till it shall appear what proportion Snaith and Co. are entitled But in the case of Ex parte Rushforth(x), this doctrine was qualified,

Upon this statute it has been decided, that an accommodation acceptor is a person liable for the debt of the bankrupt drawer, and may prove under his commission (k); and if an acceptance for the accommodation of the drawer of a bill be given before, but renewed after he has committed an act of bankruptcy, such renewal is a continuation of the same suretyship; and therefore, if a commission of bankruptcy be issued against the drawer, and the accommodation acceptor afterwards pay such second bill, he will be entitled to prove the amount under such commission; though before the renewal of the acceptance he had notice of such act of bankruptcy having been committed. > (1) Stedman v. Martinant, 13 East. 427; 12 East, 664, (Chit. j. 827). On the 5th of Jannary, 1807, the plaintiff accepted a bill for the accommodation of the defendant the drawer, which became due on the 19th of March, when it was dishonoured. On the 18th March, 1807, a docket was struck against the defendant, and on the 21st a commission of bankrupt was issued, which was superseded on the 15th of April. A meeting of the defendant's creditors was then held, when time was given to him to pay his debts by instalments. On the the 9th of June, 1807, the plaintiff accepted a second bill for the defendant, in order to take up the former one, for the same sum, with the addition of interest and stamp and the indorsement of a third person was lent an as additional security, which was required by the holders of the former bill. On the 6th of August' 1807, a valid commission was issued against the defendant, founded on an act of bankruptcy committed in the preceding March. The second bill became due on the 12th of September, 1807, when the plaintiff paid it. The first dividend under the commission was declared and made on the 6th of August, 1808. On the 4th of September, 1809, the defendant obtained his certificate. In an action for money paid, and the bankruptcy and certificate pleaded, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, subject to the opinion of the court as to whether the certificate was a discharge. The court (Le Blanc, J. absente) held, that the second acceptance was a continuation of the same suretyship which was created by the first, and that as such suretyship commenced before any act of bankruptcy committed, and consequent ly before the plaintiff could have any notice of such act, the plaintiff might, by the 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s 8, have proved his demand under the commission, and therefore the certificate was a bar. And it has been decided, that if an accommodation acceptor having paid the bill, afterwards sues the drawer as for money paid, and having obtained judgment, assign the judgment debt to a third person, such assignee of the debt may prove the original debt under the commission against the drawer, and the judgment debt, though greater than the original debt, will be barred by the certificate(q). So where a bill after *proof under a commission [ •720 ] against the acceptor, was paid by the drawer, and he after a dividend arrested the bankrupt for the balance, and was also a surety for him on another bill, the chancellor made an order that the bankrupt should be discharged, and that the plaintiff should be restrained from lodging any detainer under the statute 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, ss. 8 and 14(r).

But there are not any words in the statute compulsory upon the party to prove, or precluding him from suing the bankrupt (though subject to such action being rendered in flectual by his obtaining his certificate), and therefore the drawer of a bill who has paid the amount to the holder, after a fiat of bankruptcy issued against the acceptor, may sue such acceptor before he has obtained his certificate, and arrest him upon the bill, notwithstanding the holder has proved the bill under the flat(s). The statute applies only where the surety has paid the whole debt, or part in discharge of the whole, and therefore where a surety paid part, under circumstances which, in substance, made such payment in discharge of his own personal liability, it was holden that the bankrupt's certificate was no bar to an action by the surety to recover the money so paid by him(t). And we have seen, that the party must be substantially a surety, or liable for the But in order to bring the case within the statute, it is not original debt(u. necessary that the principal creditor should be enabled to prove, or that the bankrupt should be discharged by his certificate, if he do not (x).

IV. Proof of Bills, &c.

A surety cannot prove for interest due and paid subsequent to the commission under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 52(y).

Pariners.

A partner is considered as a person liable for the joint debt of himself and his co-partners, and it the latter become a bankrupt, and the solvent partner be afterwards obliged to pay the whole debt, the certificate of the bankrupt partner will protect him from liability to make contribution to such solvent partner; and therefore where a partner continuing the business took an assignment of all the stock, &c. and covenanted to indemnify the retiring partner from the debts then owing from the partnership, and the continuing partner became a bankrupt, and obtained liis certificate, and subsequently an action was commenced against the retiring partner upon an acceptance of the partnership, and judgment was obtained against him, and he paid the debt and costs; it was held, that no action would lie against the bankrupt upon the covenant; since, under the 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8, the retiring partner might, in respect of his liability, have resorted to and proved under the commission, and was therefore barred by the certificate(z).

Co-sure-. ties. [ *721 ]

*But the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 52, does not extend to co-sureties(a); and, therefore, if A. and B. give a joint and several promissory note for the debt of C., and B. becomes bankrupt, and, after the bankruptcy, A. is obliged to pay the note, A. cannot prove for a moiety of the note against B's estate; because in such case A. is not a surety for B., but both are co-sureties for the debt of C., and there is no debt from the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy b).

3. Against whom, and under what Fiat.

8. Against whom and under what Figt.

We have next to inquire against whom, and under what, and how many fiats, proof in respect of a bill may be made. And this may be considered under two heads; first, with reference to the particular situation of the party who has become bankrupt; and secondly, to the number of the parties.

First, a party who was a bona fide holder of a bill, drawn regularly for value, is, we have seen, entitled to prove in all cases under fiats against every one of the parties against whom he could have supported an action on the bill, though such party became bankrupt before the bill was due, and at the time when it was uncertain whether it would be paid by the acceptor(c). So a bill drawn by way of accommodation, though it cannot be proved as between the parties to the accommodation, yet it may be proved by a bona fide holder against all parties, whether they have received value or not(d). Wherever the holder could have sustained an action on the bill against the party, had he continued solvent, he may prove under his fiat, in case he IV. Proof should become bankrupt. The rights and liabilities of parties at law have of Bills, should become bankrupt. already been considered, and therefore it is unnecessary here again to notice &c. the various decisions on the subject. In the case of cross bills, and of a short whom and bill or note given by way of indemnity, we have seen that a party may fre-under what quently prove before he has actually paid money or been damnified, though Fiat. the dividends will be withheld till his own paper has been paid( $\epsilon$ ). We have also considered the liability at law of a person transferring a bill, and we have seen, that in the case of a transfer by mere delivery, without an indorsement, the party is not in any case liable to be sued by the holder, except the party to whom he immediately transferred it, and then not upon the instrument itself, but for the precedent debt or consideration between them; and that in the case of the sale of a bill, the party transferring is not liable to any party (f). So in the event of bankruptcy, it appears that if B. hand over a negotiable note for valuable consideration to G., not indorsing it, but giving a written acknowledgment on a separate paper to be accountable for the note to G., and G. indorses the note, which, together with the written acknowledgment, comes into the hands of M. for valuable consideration, and B. and the several parties to the note become bankrupts, M. cannot prove the note against the estate of B. (the written acknowledgment not being assignable), but is entitled to have the amount made an item in the account between B. and G., and to stand in the place of the latter(g). So if a person transfer a bill without \*indorsing it, but by a written instrument war- [ \*722 ] rant the payment, in the same manner as if he had indorsed it, and he become a bankrupt before the bill is due, the holder cannot prove it under a fiat against him(h). And if a trader procure cash for a bill, but do not indorse it, because the person paying the cash thinks that the bill will have as good credit without his indorsement, the bill cannot be proved under a fiat afterwards issued against the trader(i). And where a trader transferred a bill without indorsing it, and there was a private mark upon the bill, and it appeared in evidence that all bills transferred by him without indorsement, but with this mark, were considered by him as rendering him liable to pay as if he had indorsed them; it was nevertheless held, that such bill could not be proved under a commission against him(k). So where a bill is transferred by way of sale, without being indorsed, it cannot be proved under a fiat against the party transferring, even by the party to whom he transferred it(l). But if the bill were deposited merely as a pledge, the residue of the debt for which it was deposited, after a sale of the bill, is proveable under the fiat(m). And the circumstance of indorsement does not make a difference

35. H., a money broker, was in the habit of depositing bills of exchange with B. and Co. as a security for advances, but he did not indorse the bills, nor were they negotiated by B. and Co. or ever presented for payment. Among the bills so deposited was one for 1000/, accepted by C., who became bankrupt on the 5th of March, 1824, which was some time after the bill fell due. H. also became bankrupt on the 12th of December, 1825, when B. and Co. proved the amount of the balance he owed them, excepting this bill as a security, but made no attempt to prove the bill under C.'s commission until January, 1826, when the commissioners rejected the proof: held, that the delivery of the bill by H. to B. and Co. must be taken to have been by way of pledge to secure the amount of the advances then due from H. to B. and Co., and not with an intention to transfer the pro-

Under sereral Fiats.

Secondly, With respect to the number of parties, the holder of a bill or note, is entitled to prove it under different fiats against all the several parties to the instrument, under their respective fiats, and to receive dividends upon the whole sum under each, to the extent of 20s. in the pound(q); for it is a creditor's right in bankruptcy to prove and avail himself of all collateral securities from third persons to the extent of 20s in the pound(r); and the [ *723 ] holder of a bill drawn by a firm *upon some of their members constituting a distinct firm, has a right to prove it against all the parties according to their liabilities upon the bill, provided he was ignorant of their partnership(s); or such holder may prove it under one or more commissions against some of the parties, and proceed at law against the others (t). In Ex parte Rushforth(u), Lord Eldon said, "It is clear, that where a person has a demand upon a bill or bond against several persons, and no part of that demand has been paid before the bankruptcy by any of them, he may prove against each; and the circumstance that one is a surety, and the other the principal, or a co-surety as between themselves, does not give a right to stop the holder from receiving dividends till he has received 20s. in the pound; that is well settled in Ex parte Marshall and Ex parte Wildman, and it applies to joint and several demands either by bill or bond."

> It has long been settled in bankruptcy, that a creditor cannot prove against the joint estate of two bankrupt partners, and also against the separate estate of one of them, but must elect, though he has distinct securities(x), unless there is a surplus(y); and even the holder of a bill who has no notice that the drawers, acceptors, and indorsers are all members of the same firm, is not entitled to double proof(2).

Nor can a joint debt be proved under a separate fiat, except for the purpose of assenting to or dissenting from the certificate, and recovering a dividend out of the surplus, after satisfaction of the separate creditors; although proof as relates to it must be expunged(u); yet in a more recent case(x), IV. Proof where A. drew bills on B., and indorsed them to C., who discounted them of Bills, with D., together with other bills to which A. was no party, and A., B. and C. became bankrupt; it was held, that the assignees of A. were not entitled to have the bills indorsed by him delivered up on paying their amount, Proof may another bill indorsed by C., but to which A. was no party, being unpaid.

In the case of several parties, we have just seen that the holder of bill or note is entitled to prove his debt under a fiat against the drawer, acceptor, and indorsers, and to receive a dividend from each upon his whole debt, provided he does not in the whole receive more than 20s. in the pound (y). So if A. being an indorsee of B. and Co.'s acceptances for 1364l., issue a separate fiat against B., and, at the time of suing out the fiat, D., the person for whom A. discounted the acceptances, has, by payments on account, reduced the debt to 4201., A. is entitled to prove for the whole amount, and for all that he receives above the 420l. will be a trustee for D.(z). But under a fiat against the party from whom this holder received the bill, he can only prove to the amount of the actual debt then due(a). There is a distinction in these cases, where the creditor applies to prove his debt after having received a part, and where he applies to prove previous to his having received any payment or composition. If the creditor at the time of *prov- [ *726] ing has received any part of the bill or note, he can only prove for so much as remains; but if, after having proved for the whole, he receives a part of the bill from any of the persons liable to pay it, he is entitled to a dividend upon the whole, provided it does not exceed 20s, in the pound, upon such part as remains due(b); and as to any overplus beyond 20s. in the pound, it is to be accounted for to the party next entitled to the benefit(c). In Ex parte Bloxham(d) it was decided, that a creditor having securities of third persons, accommodation acceptors, to a greater amount than the debt, may prove and receive dividends upon the full amount of the securities to the extent of 20s. in the pound upon the actual debt; and Lord Eldon said, "I looked upon it as settled, that a creditor cannot hold the paper of his original debtor, a bankrupt, and prove beyond the actual debt upon it, but that such creditor may have the paper of third persons, who are debtors to such original debtor in more, and prove to the whole amount under the commission against them, and it is not material whether such third persons were indebted to the original debtor, for you cannot attach equities upon bills of exchange." in Ex parte Bloxham(e) the same point was decided, and Lord Eldon said, "A party wants to have a bill discounted, and the banker refuses to discount upon the credit of that bill only, and then the party says, he has in his hands another bill, and offers that as a security for the former, what is that but a right to prove against both estates until 20s. in the pound has been obtained?" or commit of Bills, 4. To what Extent

Proof may be made.

IV. Proof by A. to a third person, at the request of the bankrupt, the Vice-Chancellor held, that there was the same immediate contract between the bankrupt and the holder, and the bills were equally payment for the goods, as if given in payment for goods delivered by the holder to the bankrupt, and therefore that he could only prove for the sum due for the goods, and not the full amount of the bill(f). And where goods in which the bankrupts were jointly interested with A. and B. were pledged with a creditor to secure the payment of an acceptance of the bankrupts, and part of the proceeds were received by the creditor before he applied to prove, it was held that he must deduct the amount so received before he could prove on the acceptance(g). So if A. agrees to be responsible to B. for the due payment to him by C. of 24,000l. by yearly instalments of 1200l., and B. afterwards agrees to accept six joint notes of A. and C. for 2000l. each, and delivers up the original agreement to C., but only one of these notes is paid, B. cannot prove under a fiat against A. the original debt of 24,000l., but only the amount of the five notes remaining unpaid (h).

We have just seen, that if the holder of a bill or note, at the time of proving, has received any part of it, he can prove only for the remainder(i). So it has been held, that where different parties to a bill or note become bankrupt, and a dividend has been declared, though not paid, under one of the commissions under which the holder has proved his debt, he cannot afterwards prove under another commission for more than the residue, after de-[ *727 ] ducting the amount of the dividend *declared(k). In Ex parte Leers(l) the Chancellor made an order, that the dividends should be deducted from the proof, according to the practice as stated by Mr. Cooke, still expressing doubt as to the principle of it. Hence it is in general advisable, where there are several parties to a bill, to prove under the fiat against each as soon as possible, or at least before any dividend has been received, or even a fiat opened against other parties.

It seems that this provision of the legislature, in preferring the claim of friendly societies to that of other creditors, is not favoured; and that the debt, &c. must have been due from the party in his official capacity (o). Thus where an attorney was, from the commencement of the establishment of a friendly society, in the habit of receiving from the stewards the money of the society, whenever it amounted to a sum which they considered worth placing out at interest, and of giving them promissory notes from time to time carrying interest, and the attorney became a bankrupt, and indebted to the stewards upon promissory notes payable on one month's notice, and no person had been appointed treasurer, it was held, that under the former act, 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, the society was not entitled to a \*preference(p). So where no treasurer had been appointed by  $\lceil \cdot \cdot \rceil = 1$ the society, and the president and stewards were chosen annually, and the bankrupt has served the office of president and steward in different years, and in the capacity of steward had received the money of the society, and money was afterwards from time to time paid to him by the stewards and clerks, by order of the society, upon promissory notes bearing interest, given by him in the name of a firm of which he was a member, to the president and stewards, the society was held not entitled to a preference (q). debt for money lent by the consent of the society, upon a promissory note carrying interest, seems not to be entitled to a preference (r). At all events, a debt for money lent to a member of the society, upon his security, after he ceases to be an officer of the society, is not entitled to a preference(s). in Ex parte Stamford Friendly Society (t) it was held, that the preference given to friendly societies by the statute 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 10, over other creditors, was confined to debts in respect of money in the hands of their officers by virtue of their offices, and independent of contract, and, therefore, did not extend to money held by the treasurer, upon the security of his promissory note, payable with interest on demand (u).

The 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 14, s. 28, contains a provision in favour of Sav. Savings ings' Banks, similar to the above act of 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 12, relat- Bank. ing to friendly societies. Where an actuary embezzled various sums rendering forty indictments necessary, and became bankrupt, and five indictments were preferred, which failed from technical reasons, which would apply to any other indictment, the proof was allowed for the whole sum embezzled(x).

4. To what Extent Proof may be made. Interest.

The interest which is recoverable at law has already been stated (y). With respect to the proof of interest under a fiat, the former rule was, that whenever by the express terms of the bill or note interest is reserved, or where there is a contract or agreement between the parties that the debt shall carry interest, it is payable and proveable under the fiat(z). And it has been held, that even upon notes payable on demand, not reserving interest, the interest might be proved, where it appeared to be the known and established custom of the trade to allow it, and that it had actually been paid by the bankrupt, and accounts settled with him, in which it had been charged and allowed between the parties (a). And in Ex parte Hankey(b), and Ex parte Mills(c), it was held, that where by the custom of the trade interest is payable on [ *729 ] a debt, and at the regular time of stating the accounts the *debtor is debited for interest, and afterwards becomes a bankrupt, the interest is proveable under his commission, notwithstanding the debt was secured by four promissory notes, of which only one upon the face of it was payable with interest, and the other three were merely notes payable on demand. And now, by the 57th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, interest is made proveable (though not reserved), to be calculated down to the date of the commission, at such a rate as is allowed by the Court of King's Bench in an action. And where B. and Co., being largely indebted to R. and Co. indorsed to them various bills which had been drawn or indorsed by C. and Co. for the accommodation of B. and Co., and B. and Co. and C. and Co. respectively became bankrupt, and R. and Co. proved the bills under each commission; it was held, that the estate of C. and Co. was a security to make good the amount of principal and interest due to R. and Co. from B. and Co., and that R. and Co. were entitled to receive dividends on their proof under C. and Co.'s commission, until not only the balance of the principal sum due from B. and Co., but also all interest thereon was fully satisfied (d).

A creditor by bill or note is entitled to prove the whole interest due whatever may be the amount, though a special creditor can never have interest beyond the penalty contained in his security(e). And we have seen that the ereditor may prove the whole sum for which the bill or note was given, notwithstanding he received 51. per cent. discount, though the statute(f) enacts, that upon bills and notes payable at a future time, a rebate of interest shall be deducted from the actual payment of the dividend to the time when the security would have been payable.

When interest is allowed to be proved, it is never, in any case of an insolvent estate, allowed to be computed later than the date of the fiat, because it is said, the estate being a dead fund, a salvage of part to each is all that in such a general loss can be expected (g); and as such proof cannot IV. Proof be made directly, so neither can it be indirectly thrown upon the estate, ex- of Bills, cept in the event of a surplus(h). And where the act of bankruptcy to which the commission related was ascertained, no interest was, before the 4. To what Extent above enactment, allowed after that act of bankruptcy (i). And in some Proof may cases of mutual credit, when both debts carried interest, the computation of be made. interest stopped on both sides at the same time(k); but in the case of an estate which turned out to be solvent, and where a surplus would come to the bankrupt, it was held, that creditors had a right to interest up to the actual time of payment, without regard to the date of the commission (l); provided the instrument expressly entitled the holder to interest(m). And though, formerly, the rule was to allow only 41. per cent., it appears from the decision of Upton v. Lord Ferrers(n), that 51. per cent., is to be allowed; and this is analogous to the different statutes with regard to the rebate of interest.

*The difference upon the re-exchange of bills protested and re-drawn before the bankruptcy, is proveable under the fiat, but if incurred after the [ *730] bankruptcy, it is not proveable (p). So the costs and charges of protesting bills, incurred before the bankruptcy, may be proved, but not those incurred after the bankruptcy (q). But where by the particular law of the country from which the bill is drawn, or when by express stipulation the re-exchange, or costs and charges, are fixed at a particular rate, they may be proved under the fiat, though not incurred till after the act of bankruptcy. Thus, by the law of Philadelphia, the drawer of a returned bill must pay its contents, with 201. per cent. advance as liquidated damages; in this case, if he become bankrupt, the 201. per cent. may be proved under his commission, though the bill was not protested till after his bankruptcy(r).

5. The Time of Proof and of making Claim.

From the preceding observations it may be collected, that no unnecessary 5. The Time of delay should take place in making the proof, and we have seen that, in some Proof and cases, if the proof be delayed till after the dividend has been declared, of making though not received, it will prevent the holder from proving the whole amount of his bill under a fiat against another person(s). Formerly, creditors were allowed to come in and prove their debts at any time within four months and until distribution made, but they were not admitted after distribution actually made of any part of the estate; now, however, except in cases of gross laches, creditors are allowed to come in at any time while any thing remains to be divided(t). And in Re Wheeler(u) it was decided, that a creditor coming in to prove his debt after a dividend made (provided the delay was not fraudulent, but owing to accident, or unavoidable circumstances) should change(o).

5. The Time of Proof and of making Claim.

IV. Proof be put on a footing with the other creditors, before any further dividend was A creditor who has neglected to prove before a meeting to declare a second dividend, is, in strictness, only entitled to be paid future dividends pari passu with the other creditors(x); but it is the practice to permit such creditor to be paid former dividends rateably with those who have been paid, and then to direct a general distribution of the residue (y). Where a creditor has a reasonable excuse for not baving proved in time to receive a first dividend, he is, upon proving, entitled first to be placed on an equality with the other creditors who received a first dividend, but not so as to disturb a former dividend, and then to receive the future dividends rateably with the other creditors (z). The mode of being admitted to receive in respect of former dividends, is by making an affidavit of the cause of delay, and by petition to the Chancellor, upon which an order may be obtained; and the assignees should not pay without it(a). We have seen, that in the case of a surety paying the debt of his principal after a fiat against him, he may at any time prove under the fiat, not disturbing *the former dividends, and receive a dividend or dividends proportionably with the other creditors (b).

Where a party may not be able to swear to the precise amount of his debt, secured by a bill or note, it is advisable for him to make a claim, as a means of securing a dividend, when his proof is afterwards established, without the necessity of applying to the Chancellor; and when a proper claim has been made, the dividend must be apportioned for it, and be withheld, until the validity of the claim has been ascertained (c).

6. The Mode and Terms of Proof, and Remedy for the Dividend.

 The Mode and Terms of Proof, &c.

The mode of proof on bills of exchange and promissory notes is governed by the general rules affecting proof under a fiat in other cases, and consequently it will be here only necessary to consider the peculiarities in the case The ordinary proof is by the oath of the creditor (d). of bills and notes. When it is upon the bill or note, the form of the deposition varies according to the mode in which the creditor obtained the bill or note. Under a first against the party from whom the creditor immediately received the bill or note, the deposition states that the bankrupt is indebted to the deponent upon the consideration for the instrument, and alleges that no security has been obtained except the bill or note; but when the bill or note has not been received from the bankrupt himself by the creditor, the deposition states, that he is indebted on the instrument, and then shews the means and consideration by which the deponent became the holder(e). The affidavit in support of a deposition of proof on a bill must state the consideration; though, if a defective affidavit be produced, the commissioner should not reject, but should adjourn the proof(f).

Where bills have been deposited by way of pledge, the proof is upon the original debt, and the deposition concludes by stating the delivery of the bills as a security, the particulars of which, if numerous, may be stated in a And where several persons, whether general partners or othschedule(g).

Proof ors in the deposition(h); but it is sufficient, if the deposition be made by one of Bills, and of the partners (i). If a hill has been lost the proof must be admitted &c. only of the partners(i). If a bill has been lost, the proof must be admitted, or, if lost after proof, the dividend must be paid, upon an indemnity (k). creditor is obliged, at the time of proving his debt, to state in his deposition Terms of whether he has a security or not; and every security must be produced at Proof, &c. the time when he proves, and the commissioners will mark it as having been And it seems doubtful whether if A., being holder of the exhibited (l). bankrupt's promissory note, and having a security in his hands for the full amount, indorse the note to B., but still retain the security, B. can prove the note without deducting or mentioning the security (m).

In general, if a party insist upon proving under a fiat, he must deliver *up [ *732 ] the security for the benefit of the creditors (n), or must apply to the commissioners to have the pledge sold, and to be admitted a creditor for the resi-Thus if a creditor having agreed to accept a composition for his debt (arising on seven bills of exchange), takes bills for the amount of the composition, and also has a bond assigned to him as part security for the composition; and the composition deed contains a clause that in default in payment of the instalments, the composition shall fall to the ground; and default is made, and subsequently a fiat issues; the creditor may either prove for the whole of the original debt, on surrendering the bond, or he may retain the bond, and prove for his original debt, minus the value which shall be set upon the bond (p). And where a debtor, by way of collateral security, delivers a bill of exchange or promissory, without his name appearing upon the paper, this is to be considered as a pledge, and not as an absolute transfer of the bill; and the creditor will not be allowed to prove under the fiat against such debtor, and also to retain the securities, but must either give them up or obtain an order for the sale of them, and then prove for the deficiency (q). Where a creditor, by a debt partly proveable and partly not under a fiat of bankruptcy, has a general pledge, he may apply it to the debt not proveable under the fiat(r). Thus if a security is deposited by a debtor to indemnify his creditor for a balance then due, together with such further sums of money as shall be due to him for money to be advanced and paid for the debtor, either by bill accepted or to be accepted, and the debtor become a bankrupt, and the creditor, after the bankruptcy, pay various acceptances, he may apply the security, in the first place, to reduce the demand not proveable, on account of its not having been paid till after the bankruptcy(s). So if a security be deposited by a drawer to indemnify the acceptor, who pays part of his acceptances before the bankruptcy of the drawer, and part after such bankruptcy, the acceptor may apply the security to reduce the demand paid after the bankruptcy (t).

Where, however, the bankrupt does not merely deposit the bills or notes debt under the commission against the same party, renouncing any benefit under the commission, so as to afford him an opportunity of preventing, as far as he could, the very remedy he had chosen from being defeated by the rest of the creditors discharging the person of the bankrupt by signing his certificate without concurrence or control; and a party might also make [*733] a claim and still proceed at law(y). *But the provision in the statute 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 14(z), (which is re-enacted in the 59th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16), directs that a creditor who has brought an action against a bankrupt, shall not be permitted to prove, or make a claim, without reliaquishing such action, and that the proving or claiming a debt under a commission shall be deemed an election by such creditor to take the benefit of the commission with respect to the debts so proved or claimed. And if a party prove a debt on a bill, and proceed at law for the same debt, the court will issue an injunction to restrain the action(a). The statute, however, does not affect the right of a person not being the petitioning creditor, to prove one debt under a fiat, and to proceed at law for another(b). And in Ex parte Grosvenor(c), Lord Eldon said, "That if a creditor has a note for one sum and a bond for another, as the remedies and the relief under those securities are different, he may prove one debt and hold the bankrupt in execution for the other. But an entire demand cannot be split, and if there be a demand upon several notes or securities given in respect of the same transaction, it seems that the creditor cannot adopt these double remedies(d)." It has, nevertheless, been decided at law, that where there are distinct demands the election is confined to the particular debt so proved or claimed, and accordingly creditors who had proved on one demand were holden entitled to sue upon distinct demands (e). By the 59th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, a creditor must, before proving, in case he has the bankrupt in custody, give a written authority for his discharge; and by the same section a creditor, who has elected to come in under the commission, if it be afterwards superseded, is restored to his former right.

It sometimes happens, after a creditor has made his proof, that either IV. Proof from the disclosure of facts not before known or understood, it appears that of Bills. it ought not to have been admitted, or at least not to the extent; or that, 6. The from a change of circumstances, the state of the debt proved is materially Mode and altered: and in such cases it becomes necessary either to reduce the proof, Terms of or to expunge it altogether (f). Thus, if any bills proved and accepted as Proof, &c. securities by a creditor who discounted them for the bankrupt, or took them Reducing as a security for a general balance, are afterwards paid in full, or in any way and Exfully satisfied, the amount of each bill must be deducted from the proof, and Proof. the future dividends only paid on the residue of the debt(g), although where a creditor holds a bill as a security for the debt he proves and after the *ac- [ *34] tual receipt of dividends by the creditor the bill is paid in full, the representatives of the creditor cannot be compelled to refund the dividends; nor, as it seems, could the creditor, if alive (h). So, if the holder of a bill compound with the prior parties upon it, without the previous assent of assignees of the subsequent parties, the latter are discharged; and if he takes such composition after having proved under the fiat against the latter, the amount of the bill must be deducted from the proof(i). But the principle of these decisions is the same as that which precludes a party from recovering at law, and we have seen that at law the holder does not discharge a prior party to a bill by compounding with a subsequent one, even though the former was known to be an accommodation acceptor (k); so in the case of bankruptcy, compounding with a subsequent party will not affect the right to the dividends under a fiat against a prior one, because the estate of the latter has no claim upon that of the former, and therefore cannot be prejudiced by the arrangement. It was on this ground held, in the case of Ex parte Gifford(1), that if a promissory note be made by one principal and three sureties, two of whom and the principal become bankrupts, and the holder of the note prove his whole debt under each commission, and afterwards receive a composition of 48. in the pound from the remaining surety, the receipt for which is expressed to be for 1911., and two notes, which, when duly paid, will be in full of the said debt and all other demands; and the dividend paid by the estate of the principal in 4s. in the pound and by the bankrupt sureties is 5s. in the pound; no part of the proof under the commission against the bankrupt sureties is to be expunged. It is also a rule that security is not to go in reduction of proof, unless the property of the estate against which the proof is tendered; and, therefore, if A. and B., partners, are indebted to C. in 10,000l. on bills, and A. alone assigns to C. certain securities to secure the 10,000l., under which 84141. are received, C., on the bankruptcy of A. and B. may prove for the whole 10,000l. without deducting the 8414l.(m).

Previous to the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, the commissioners could not expunge a debt without an order upon petition, except by consent of the parties (n).

*Where A. combines with B., also A. with C., and A. with D. to prove fictitious debts, in pursuance of a fraudulent plan, a petition will not lie praying that A., B., C., and D. may pay the gross amount of costs incurred by the estate, and consequential to such fraudulent plan, and if such debts are subsequently expunged, the court cannot order the fictitious bills on which the proof was made to be delivered up, unless they were delivered up by the bankrupt after his bankruptcy(p).

Restoring Proof.

We have seen that in some case, where the proof has been expunged, it may be restored, in order that the party himself, or some third person, may have the benefit of the original proof, and receive dividends which would not otherwise be recoverable (q).

Benefit of another's Proof.

Where, between the time of proving his debt and of applying for a dividend under a fiat against a principal debtor, as acceptor of a bill, maker of a note, or prior indorser, who ultimately ought to pay it, the holder has received from a surety or subsequent indorser, or of an accommodation acceptor, the whole of his debt, such party, thus standing in the situation of a surety, is entitled to the benefit of the proof made by the creditor; and he must receive the dividends as trusted for the surety (r), provided the creditor be not thereby prejudiced in respect of any other claim upon the estate(s). The surety is allowed the entire benefit of the principal creditor's proof(t): thus, where A. accepted bills as an accommodation for B., which B. deposited in the way of business as a security with his bankers, and B. became bankrupt, and the bankers proved their debt under the fiat, and afterwards A. paid the full value of the bills to the bankers; it was held, that the bankers were liable to refund the dividend of 2s. in the pound which they had received on the sum covered by the bills (u).

If a person, having a demand upon a country firm, who have dealings with a house in London, obtain permission from the country firm for one of his creditors to draw upon the London house, and the country firm and the London house become bankrupts, and the drawer, after proving under the fiat against the London house, receive payment from his original debtor, that is, the person having a demand upon the country firm, such person is entitled to the benefit of the drawer's proof against the London house, if he have be entitled to in respect of such proof(z)."

Formerly, when a dividend of the bankrupt's estate had been declared by Remedy to the commissioners, an action might be maintained against the assignees by a pividend. party who had proved a bill, for his share of the dividend, and in such action the proceedings before the commissioners were conclusive evidence of the debt; nor were the assignees suffered to set off any debt from the plaintiff to the bankrupt(a). But by the 111th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which adopts the 45 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 12, it is enacted, that "no action for any dividend shall be brought against the assignees by any creditor who shall have proved under the commission; but if the assignees shall refuse to pay any such dividend, the Chancellor may, on petition, order payment thereof, with interest for the time that it shall have been withheld, and the costs of the application (b)." The creditor, to be cutilled to interest under this clause, must have previously applied to the assignee for payment(c). Though where a dividend has been ordered, and the assignees forward to a creditor a bill for the amount of his dividend, which the creditor rejects, because he claims more than is offered, (namely, full payment without allowing the assignces a set-off which they claimed against him, and the amount of which, together with the sum tendered, made up the amount of the dividend declared on the creditor's proof), and the proceeds of the bill are received by one assignee and by him invested at interest, the creditor is, after a lapse of twenty years, entitled to the fund, and all interest made by it(d).

If an assignee sign checks for a dividend, and deposit them in a desk, from which they are fraudulently taken by a clerk, who obtains payment from the bankers, it seems the assignce is liable to the creditor(e). And where there were four assignees, and upon the choice it was agreed by the assignees and creditors present, that one only should act, and notice was given to the bankers to pay his drafts, and a dividend being declared, notice was given to the creditors that they might receive the dividend upon application to "the assignees," and the acting assignee paid the dividends by checks, which were dishonoured, he having overdrawn his account and absconded, it was held, that all the assignees were liable (f).

IV. Proof of Bills, Arc.

7. The Consequence of not proving, and Effect of Certificate.

7. Effect of

It may be laid down as a clear and established principle, that the dis-Certificate. charge of the bankrupt should be commensurate and co-extensive with the relief to the creditor, and consequently that all debts should be discharged by the certificate that either have been, or that might have been, proved under the flat(g); and, on the other hand, the bankrupt's remaining still [ *737 ] liable, and the creditor's not being able to *prove his debt under the commission, are convertible terms(h). The various instances in which bills and notes may be proved have been considered. The statutes which enable the holder of a bill to prove in particular cases contain a clause, that in cases where the holder could avail himself of the proof, the certificate shall protect the bankrupt from all further responsibility: thus the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 121, enacts, "That every bankrupt who shall have duly surrendered, and in all things conformed himself to the laws in force concerning bankrupts at the time of issuing the commission against him, shall be discharged from all debts due by him when he became bankrupt, and from all claims and demands hereby made proveable under the commission, in case he shall obtain a certificate of such conformity so signed and allowed, and subject to such provisions as herein after directed, but no such certificate shall release or discharge any person who was partner with such bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, or who was then jointly bound, or had made any joint contract with such bankrupt." And the statute 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8, (which is adopted by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 52,) having enabled sureties to prove in various instances where he has been compelled to pay the bill or note after the issuing of the commission, has greatly enlarged the effect of the certificate(i).

There are, however, still some cases relating to bills and notes, in which the certificate will not be a bar to any future action. Thus, if the bill or note be drawn and payable in England, and the cause of action accrue here, a certificate abroad will not be any bar to an action in this country, although at the time of making the contract the bankrupt resided abroad in the country where he afterwards obtained his certificate(k). And an accommodation bill drawn in Ireland, and accepted and paid by the plaintiffs in England, is a debt contracted in England, and cannot therefore be discharged by a certificate under an Irish commission (l). But where the cause of action accrues abroad, a certificate in the country where the cause accrued, is a bar to any action in this country (m). And where a bill of exchange was drawn and accepted in Ireland, and the acceptor became a bankrupt in Ire-

And ? Effect of if a person draw a bill in America, in favour of a firm in America, who have also a house in London, upon a person residing in London, and the bill be refused acceptance, and notice of refusal is given to the drawer in America, and the drawer *afterwards become a bankrupt, and obtained his | *738 ] certificate, in America, it is a bar in this country to any action against the The general rule of law is, that debitum et contractus sunt nullis loci, and that the payment of a debt, wherever it may have been contracted, may be enforced in any country; and, consequently, whenever a creditor might prove under a commission abroad, it should seem, on principle, that a certificate ought to be a bar to every debt, wherever it was con-But, on the other hand, great inconveniences might ensue from fraudulent certificates in remote countries being obtained before a creditor here could be apprised of the proceeding, and therefore unless the contract was made, or at least in some measure connected with the foreign country, he should not be prejudiced by such certificate. When a certificate abroad operates as a discharge in this country, it seems that the extent of the discharge will depend upon the law of the country where the certificate is obtained (p).

Where a bankrupt is discharged by his certificate from a debt in one form, he cannot be charged by the creditor with the same debt in another form of action; and therefore, in the case of Foster v. Surtees(q), where, by agreement between the plaintiffs, bankers at Carlisle, and the defendants, bankers at Newcastle, the plaintiffs were weekly to send to the defendants all their own notes and the notes of certain other banking-houses; and the defendants were in exchange to return the plaintiffs their own notes and the notes of certain other bankers, and the deficiency, if any, was to be made up by a bill drawn by the defendants in favour of the plaintiffs at a certain date; it was held, that the notes so sent by the plaintiffs to the defendants constituted a debt against them, which the defendants might pay by a return of notes according to the agreement; but if they made no such return, or a short return, and gave no bill for the balance, such balance, remained as a debt against them, which was proveable by the plaintiffs under a commission of bankrupt issued against the defendants, on the act of bankruptcy committed after the time when the bill for the balance, if drawn, would have been due and payable; and that the plaintiffs could not maintain an action to recover damages as for a breach of contract against the defendants, who had obtained their certificates. But in some cases a creditor has an election to shape his demand on the bankrupt either as a debt or as for a tort, and if he adopt the latter, the certificate will be no bar. Thus, if a bankrupt, to whom a bill has been delivered to obtain the payment when due, and to remit to his employer, discount it at a loss before it is due, and embezzle the money, if sued for this tort his certificate will be no bar(r). So if bills be deposited merely as a pledge, if the bankrupt pledge them as his own, he will continue liable to a special action for this tort(s).

The illegality of a bill or note given in consideration of signing a bank-IV. Proof of Bills, rupt's certificate has already been considered (t). And it is a good answer &c. to a plea of bankruptcy that the certificate was obtained by fraud, notwith-7. Effect of standing the express enactment to that effect in 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 7, is Certificate omitted in 6 Geo. 4, c. 16(u).

> *The effect of the certificate as to a debt which might have been proved under the fiat, may be avoided by a fresh contract entered into with the bankrupt bona fide after an act of bankruptcy, even before or after he has obtained his certificate'x). All the debts of a bankrupt continue due in conscience, notwithstanding he has obtained his certificate; and though a security or a promise, as a consideration for signing his certificate is void(y), any security given bona fide without fraud or imposition on the bankrupt, is valid and binding upon him, though there be no new consideration(z). Thus in the case of Trueman v. Fenton(a), where the bankrupt, after the act of bankruptcy, and after the issuing of the commission, but before he had obtained his certificate, gave a promissory note in consideration of two former bills of the bankrupt being cancelled, and of an agreement not to accept a dividend under the commission, it was held that the certificate was no bar to an action on the note. And if a bankrupt, after obtaining his certificate, undertake to pay any creditor the residue of his debt, the undertaking, if made freely, and without fraud, is binding(b). However, a bankrupt having obtained his certificate, is not liable upon a promise to pay a former debt, unless it be express, distinct, and unequivocal(c). And now, by the 131st section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, it is provided that no bankrupt shall be liable to pay any debt, &c. from which he shall have been discharged by his certificate, unless such promise, contract, or agreement is made in writing, signed by the bankrupt or by some person thereto lawfully authorized in writing by him(d).

Mutual have taken place between a bankrupt and another trader, they have re-Credit and spectively given greater credit to each other than would have taken place in Set-off. any separate ex parte dealings, it is but just, that in the case of bankruptcy, their mutual demands should be set off against each other. It was therefore Enactenacted by the statute 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 28, "that where it shall appear ments relating to the commissioners, or the major part of them, that there hath been mutu- 5 Geo. 2, al credit given by the bankrupt and any other *person, or mutual debts be- c. 80. s. 28. tween the bankrupt and any other person, at any time before any such person [ *740] became a bankrupt, the said commissioners, or the major part of them, or the assignees of such bankrupt's estate, shall state the account between them, and one debt may be set against another, and what shall appear to be due on either side on the balance of such account, and on setting such debts against one another, and no more, shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively." And by the statute 46 Geo. 3, c. 135, s. 3, it is enacted, "that in 46 Geo. 3, all cases in which, under commissions of bankrupt hereafter to be issued, it c. 135, s. shall appear that there has been mutual credit given by the bankrupt and any other person, or mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, one debt or demand may be set off against another, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy committed by such bankrupt before the credit was given to or the debt was contracted by such bankrupt, in like manner as if no such prior act of bankruptcy had been committed, provided such credit was given to the bankrupt two calendar months (f) before the date and suing forth of such commission, and provided the person claiming the benefit of such set-off had not, at the time of giving such credit, any notice of any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed, or that he was insolvent or had stopped payment(f)."

The 50th section of the 6th Geo. 4, c. 16, has consolidated with amend- 6 Goo. 4, ments these provisions, and enacts, that where there has been mutual credit given by the bankrupt and any other person, or where there are mutual debts between the bankrupt and any other person, the commissioners shall state the account between them (g), and one debt or demand may be set against another, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy committed by such bankrupt, before the credit given to or the debt contracted by him, and what shall appear due on either side on the balance of such account, and no more. shall be claimed or paid on either side respectively, and every debt or demand hereby made proveable against the estate of the bankrupt(h), may also be set off in manner aforesaid against such estate; provided that the person claiming the benefit of such set-off had not, when such credit was given, notice(i) of an act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed.

The alterations which this act effects are, 1st, That the proviso that the credit must have been given two months before the date of the commission is omitted, and consequently the account may now be taken down to the issuing of the fiat. 2dly, That the notice by which the party is to be affect-

(g) The account is also to be taken on a trial at law; see 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 28. In Collins v. Jones, 17th October, 1827, Lord Tenterden said he thought the omission in the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, of the words "at any time before such bankruptcy," which are in 5 Geo 2, made no difference in the right of set-off; it was only meant to provide against a secret act of bank-

v. Mutual ed is confined only to notice of an act of bankruptcy; and Sdly, It declares Credit and that every debt or demand made proveable by the act may be set off against Set-off. the bankrupt's estate (k).

Upon these statutes it is observeable that the word credit is more comprehensive than the word debt, and Lord Mansfield said, in the case of French v. [ *741 ] Fen(l), that the act of parliament was accurately *drawn to avoid the injustice that would be done, if the words were only mutual debts, and it therefore provides for mutual credit. But the word credit means such credits as will terminate in cross debts(m). The subject of mutual credit, as far as it relates to bills of exchange and promissory notes, may be considered under the three following heads:-

- 1. The nature of the debt and consideration upon which it is founded.
- 2. In what right due, and the parties between whom the mutual credit may
- 3. The time when the debt or credit arose.

With respect to the debt or demand proposed to be set off, not only mutual 1. The Nature of the running accounts are within the statutes, but also other cross demands sub-Debt to be sisting at the time of issuing the fiat of bankruptcy, and which will end in a debt(n), and even such debts have been allowed to be set off as could not have been brought into any account in equity betwixt the parties, such as debts accruing to one party not by contract, but by reason of the fraud of the other, and therefore not strictly a mutual credit(o). Even a legacy, which cannot be considered as a demand arising from a contract, has, when assented to by the executor, been considered admissible as a set-off against a demand on the legatee (p). In one case it was held, that the illegality of the consideration would not, in case of bankruptcy, in all cases preclude a person from setting off what was equitably due; and that a party to a contract, on which he had taken usurious interest, might set off the sum really advanced on the contract(q). But that doctrine does not seem tenable(r). A transaction has been held to be a mutual credit, though its operation seemed contrary to an agreement of all the parties, for a vendor of several parcels of goods sold to the bankrupt, for which the latter gave his acceptances, payable at different times, having received of the bankrupt, at the time one of them became due before the bankruptcy, a bill of exchange for a greater amount, and given an undertaking to pay over the difference when received, was allowed, though contrary to the agreement to retain it for the debt due to him upon the other parcels, which were not paid for at the time of the bankruptcy; this constituting a mutual credit, on the one side to the bankrupt upon his acceptances, the obligation to pay which, at all events, at a future day, was not superseded by the agreement; and on the other, by giving the The same point was established in Ex parte Wagstaff (t), in which it was held, that an acceptance not due till after the bankruptcy of the drawer, the draw Lord Co dertaking be was a business bill of ex and B. a were enti having te remained mutual ci bankrupt of a set-( as where satisfaction as for go of sale b off (y). after not receipts(: bankrupt' debt due ment, and the bill w by sendin ker by ev may be co and proof the divide it might b some of v counted ( diate cree a balance running, hands 9, and A. in an acı fore his of the di But th only to (

If the assignees of a bankrupt affirm the acts of the bankrupt as a contract, by suing a party in assumpsit, he may have the benefit of a set-off, which he could not have had if he had been sued as for a tort: as where goods had been sold to a party by way of fraudulent preference in satisfaction of a debt due to him from the bankrupt, and the assignees sued him as for goods sold and delivered, thereby affirming the transaction as a contract of sale by the bankrupt, the purchaser was allowed to avail himself of a set-But if a banker receive and pay money on account of a bankrupt, after notice of his bankruptcy, he cannot set off the payments against the A creditor upon a bill of exchange or promissory note of the receipts(z). bankrupt's indorsed to him before the bankruptcy, may set it off against a debt due from himself to the bankrupt for goods bought after the indorsement, and also before the bankruptcy, though the bankrupt did not know that the bill was indorsed to and in the possession of the party at the time, for by sending a bill or note into the world credit is given to the acceptor or maker by every person who takes the bill(a). The case Ex parte Metcalf(b) may be considered as a case of mutual credit; A. and B. had become bankrupts, and proof in respect to a cash balance due from A. to B. was admitted, but the dividends were ordered to be retained to reimburse the estate of B. what it might be liable to pay on account of an advance of bills from A. to B. some of which were dishonoured. Where A. before his bankruptcy discounted certain bill with B. and Co. his bankers, and they gave him immediate credit for the value of the bills in his account minus the discount, and a balance was struck before the bankruptcy, and whilst the bills were yet running, in favour of A., when the bankers admitted that they had in their hands 9341. 8s. 8d. due to A., giving him credit for the bills then running, and A. became a bankrupt, and the bills were dishonoured, it was held, that in an action against the bankers for the balance admitted to be due to A. before his bankruptcy, they had a right to set off against such claim the amount of the dishonoured bills, it being a case of mutual credit(c).

Mutual Debts.

By the act for the relief of insolvent debtors in India, 9 Geo. 4, c. 73, s. 36, it is enacted, "that when there has been mutual credit given by the insolvent or insolvents and any other person or persons, one debt or demand may be set against the other, and all such debts, dues, and claims as may be proved under a commission of bankruptcy, according to the provisions of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, or may hereafter be proveable under such commission by virtue of any act hereafter to be passed (g), may also be proved upon any such hearing as is herein before mentioned in the same manner, and subject to the like deductions, conditions, and provisions as in the said last-mentioned act are set forth and prescribed." Under this statute the following important case has recently been decided by the Court of Privy Council: the facts were these-Palmer and Co. having borrowed a large sum of money of the Bank of Bengal, deposited company's paper with the bank to a great amount as a collateral security, accompanied with an agreement in writing, authorising the bank, in default of repayment of the loan by a given day, "to sell the company's paper for the reimbursement of the bank, rendering to P. and Co. any surplus;" before default was made in the repayment of the loan, P. and Co. were declared insolvents under the above statute. At the time of the adjudication of insolvency, the bank were also holders of two promissory notes of P. and Co. which they had discounted for them, before the transaction of the loan and the agreement as to the deposit of the company's pa-The time for repayment of the loan having expired, the bank sold the company's paper, the proceeds of which, after satisfying the principal and interest due on the loan, produced a considerable surplus:-In an action by the assignees of P. and Co. against the bank, to recover the amount of the surplus, it was held, upon appeal to the privy council, that the bank could not set off the amount of the two promissory notes, and that the case did not come within the clause of mutual credit in the Bankrupt Act; there being no debt from, or credit given to the bank at the time of the insolvency of P. and Co.(h): but, otherwise, if the bank had actually sold the paper and received the surplus before the insolvency.

But under particular circumstances, where great iniustice would otherwise prevail, exceptions to this rule are allowed; thus, if a person give a note to his bankers on account of a supposed balance due to them, but in which there is a mistake, and the bankers indorse the note to another firm, consisting of some of the partners in the banking-house; the maker of the note may set off the debt due to him from his bankers, to an action commenced against him on the note by the firm who hold it, the knowledge of one of the partners in such firm, being deemed equivalent to notice to all, and consequently they were affected by the state of accounts between the maker of the note and his bankers n). And in Ex parte Stevens(o), an equitable set-off, under circumstances, was allowed when there could be none at law; in that case bankers directed to lay out money in navy annuities, but not having done so, represented that they had, and made entries, and accounted for the dividends accordingly; and they took a joint promissory note from the party under that supposition, and her brother, to secure an advance from them to him, upon which the assignees, under their bankruptcy, sued him alone, an order was made for proof of the balance, setting off the debt due upon the note, and that the note should be delivered to her as if she had paid it.

A debt due to a party as trustee for another person cannot be set off(p). And if the drawer of a bill, accepted and dishonoured by the bankrupt, indorse it over to a third party in trust to purchase certain goods of the bankrupt, and hand them over to the drawer, the bill so indorsed cannot be setoff in an action by the assignees to recover the price of the goods (q).

(q) Lackington v. Combes, 6 Bing. N. C. 71. To an action by assignees of a bankrupt for the price of a phaeton, for which defendant bad agreed to pay ready money, defendant pleaded a set-off in respect of a bill of exchange drawn by H. accepted by the bankrupt and indorsed by H. to the defendant. The plaintiff replied that, after the bill was dishonoured, H. indorsed it to defendant without consideration, in trust that defendant would purchase the phaeton of the bankrupt, band it over to H., and fraudulently attempt to set off the bill against the price of the phaeton: it was held a sufficient answer to a claim of set-off.

Set-off. Time when Debt or Credit arose.

V. Mutual a commission, and by the express words of 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 28, and the 46 Geo. 3, c. 135, s. 3, relative to mutual debts and credits, no debt or credit could have been set against another by way of set-off, unless both respectively accrued or were given before the act of bankruptcy(r). But since the Mutual the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, it suffices if the set-off accrued before the issuing of the commission, where there has been a secret act of bankruptcy, and the party had no notice of it(s). Before this act, in a case where bankers accepted bills of exchange for the accommodation of a trader, and he, after committing an act of bankruptcy, lodged money in their hands to pay the bills, it was held, that as the money was deposited after an act of bankruptcy, the assignees might recover it, and the bills could not be set off(t); but such a case would now be decided otherwise under the 6 Geo. 4, which permits the account to be taken down to the commission, provided the party had no notice of the bankruptcy (u). It has been held, that to enable the holder of a bankrupt's acceptances to avail himself of them in an action by the assignees against himself on his own acceptances, by way either of setoff or of mutual credit, he must most distinctly prove, either that the obligation on himself to pay the bill so set off subsisted before the bankruptcy, or that there was a mutual credit created in the origin of the bills(x). Yet, if the ground of the proposed set-off constituted a credit, though not, strictly speaking, a debt, before the act of bankruptcy, it may be set off under the clause of mutual credit (y). A demand arising upon an instrument payable after the bankruptcy, may, if the instrument were made before, be set off, if it be payable unconditionally on a day certain(z). And a bill or note payable unconditionally, and given by a principal to a surety by way of indemnity, may be set off(a). And a person who lends notes of hand, and receives from the borrower a memorandum promising to indemnify him, may set off the amount of any of these notes, paid by him after the bankruptcy of the borrower, to a demand from the assignees for a sum due to the borrower(b). So a party who indorses a bill for the accommodation of the bankrupt before his bankruptcy, but does not pay the bill till after the bankruptcy, may set off the amount (c). But a debt contracted after notice of the act of bankruptcy cannot be set off(d).

A bill or note indorsed to the claimant for the first time after the act of bankruptcy, could not be set off, although we have seen it might be proved(e); and it was incumbent on an indorsee to shew that the indorsement was made before the bankruptcy; but the possession by the payee of a note, made before the bankruptcy, seems to have afforded reasonable presumptive [ *746] evidence that it came into his *possession at the time it bore date(f). Where to an action by the assignees of a bankrupt for a debt due to the Mutaal bankrupt before his bankruptcy, it was held, that proof that notes to the Credit and Set-off. amount of the set-off came into the defendant's hands three or four weeks 3. The before the bankruptcy, was sufficient evidence from which the jury might infer that he was in possession of them at the time of the bankruptcy, without the Mutual identifying them with the notes produced(g). Though in this case the debt, Debt or Credit as against the bankrupt, existed before the bankruptcy, yet it was not to the arose. same party, and though we have seen that such a debt is allowed to be proved by the statute 7 Geo. 1, c. 31, that is very different from the operation of a set-off; for by the former no new charge at least is brought upon the estate, which it would not have been liable to at the time of the bankruptcy, but which there is in the latter, and a creditor cannot be permitted to vary the relation in which he stood to the bankrupt's estate at that time by an act ex post facto, in a transaction with a third party, and thereby to put himself in a better condition than the rest of the creditors (h). In the case of Dickson v. Evans, Lord Kenyon, observing upon this rule, said, "It would be most unjust indeed if one person, who happens to be indebted to another at the time of the bankruptcy of the latter, were permitted, by any intrigue between himself and a third person, so to change his own situation, as to diminish or totally destroy the debt due to the bankrupt by an act ex In cases of this sort, the question must be considered in the same manner as if it had arisen at the time of the bankruptcy, and cannot be varied by any change in the situation of one of the parties." But see 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50(i).

It was formerly held, that a bill of exchange bond fide in the hands of an indorser before an act of bankruptcy committed by the acceptor, and returned to and taken up and paid by such indorser after the bankruptcy, could not be set off by him under the commission against the acceptor; that point was decided in the case Ex parte Hale(k), and in that case the Chancellor said, "Pay the 901. that you owe the estate, and prove the 2001. I see no objection to that, but you cannot, by paying that bill, put yourself in a better situation than any other creditor; there was no mutual credit; there was a debt created upon the estate, and due at the time of the bankruptcy. but that debt was not due to you; therefore, in that respect the set-off fails. In the latter case cited(1) there was no prejudice to the estate; it made no But the case of Ex parte Hale was afterwards qualified larger demand." and explained, and it was held, that the maker of a note indorsed by the payee to a man who afterwards becomes a bankrupt, might set off against such note an acceptance of the bankrupt indorsed to him (such maker of the note) before, though taken up by him after, the bankruptcy(m). it was established, that where there was a *mutual credit before the bank- [ *747] ruptcy, the circumstance of an indorser not being the holder at the time of the act of bankruptcy will not deprive him of his right of set-off when he has again become the holder (n).

V. Mutual Set-off.

3. The Time when the Mutual Debt or Credit arose.

*The statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, has provided, that mutual debts and Credit and credits contracted or given after a secret and unknown act of bankruptcy, up to the date of the commission, may be set off. But in the case of several partners, if the party attempting to set off knew of an act of bankrupter com-> see Collins v. Jones, E T. A. D. 1830, Bayl. 5th edit, 594, note 5. A kept cash with M. and Co bankers, and accepted a bill drawn by one of the partners in the house of M. and Co., and indorsed by that partner to M. and Co., who discounted it, and afterwards indorsed for value to S. Before the bill became due, M. and Co, became bankrupts, having funds in the hands of S. more than sufficient to pay the bill, and having in their hands money belonging to A. When the bill became due, S. presented it for payment to A., who having refused payment to S., paid himself the amount out of the funds of M. and Co. remaining in his hands, and delivered the bill to their assignees: held, in an action brought by the assignees against A. as acceptor of the bill, that there had been before the bankruptcy a mutual credit between the bankrupt and A., and that the latter was entitled to set off against the sums due to the bankrupts on the bill, the debt due to him from M. and Co. at the time of their bankruptcy.

Lord Tenterden, C. J. "I am of opinion that the defendant is entitled to set off against the sum due to the plaintiffs on the bills the sum of 23511. 8s. 6d, on the ground that there was before the bankruptcy a mutual credit between the bankrupts and the defendant, within the meaning of the statute 5 Geo. 2, c. 30. The 28th section of that statute enacts, ' that where it shall appear to the commissioners that there hath been mutual credit given by the bankrupt or any other person at any time before such person became bankrupt, the commissioners or the assignces may state the account between them, and one debt may be set-off against another, and the balance only shall be paid.' The question therefore is, whether in this case there was a mutual credit between Nash and Marsh and Co. before the bankruptcy of the latter? The bills were drawn by one of the partners in the house of Marsh and Co., and accepted by Nash. They were drawn for the the convenience of the latter. Marsh & Co. gave him credit as the acceptor of the bills. He had money in their hands; he therefore gave them credit. There was a mutual credit originally constituted. If there was once a mutual credit constituted between these parties, was it in the power of Marsh and Co., by any act of their own, to put an end to that mutual credit so as to deprive the defendant of his right to set off any debt due from them to him against the sum claimed by them or their assignees from him as acceptor of those bills? It cannot be denied that if Marsh and Co. had always kept the bills in their own hands, there would have been a continuing mutual credit between them and the defendant, and that the latter therefore would have been entitled to deduct the sum due to him from Marsh and Co. at the time of their bankruptcy, from the sum claimed by their assignees from him as the acceptor of the bills. I think that Marsh and Co., the holders of the bills, could not by their own act put an end to the mutual credit originally constituted between them and the defendant, so as to deprive the latter of his right to set off any debt due from them to him against the sums claimed by them or (in the event of their bankruptcy) by their assignees from him as the acceptor of those bills. This case is distinguishable from the two cases cited. In Exparte Hale, 3 Ves. 304, (Chit.) 574), it does not appear that Hale was the drawer of the bill; no credit therefore was originally constituted between him and the bankrupt. In Ex parte Burton, 1 Rose, 320, the bill was drawn by Burton and accepted by De Franco and Corea. Burton was one of the petitioners, and he was the person who ought to have paid that bill as between him and De Franco and Corea. But here Nash was the person who ought to have paid the bills. Upon the whole I am of opinion that the defendant was entitled to set off the sum of 2351l. against the amount of the bills. The judgment of the Court must therefore be for the defendant."

Bayley, J. "This is a clear case of mutual credit. Was Nash a debtor to Marsh and Co. before their bankruptcy, or had they given him credit before that time? Nash wants money on his bills, Marsh and Co. advance him money. The relation of lender and borrower was thereby constituted between them. March and Co. might have maintained an action for money had and received to their use. Nash gives credit to Marsh and Co for the money in their hands. Here therefore there was a mutual credit between the bankrupts and the defendant, without the intervention of any third person. In Ex parte Hale, 3 Ves. 304, there was no immediate connection between the indorser of the bill and the bankrupt. There was no credit given by the acceptor to the indorser. At no period, as between them, was there a debitum in prasenti solvendum infuturo. In Ex parte Burton, I Rose, 320, it was impossible to come to any other conclusion than that which was come to, on the principle of set-off. Who were the debtors on the bill in that case? De Franco and Corea; they were acceptors of the bill, Burton was the drawer, and having money in Kensington and Co.'s house when they failed, endeavored by the petition to transfer his right against Kensington and Co. to De Franco and Corea. That case therefore is distinguishable from the present."

Littledale, J. "There was a mutual credit originally constituted between the defendant and the bankrupt They afterwards pay the bills away, but they are returned to them by Martin, Stone and Co. If they had never parted with the possession of the bills, there would have been a continuing mutual credit. There may have been a temporary suspension of the mutual credit, but it revived when the bills again came into the hands of the bankrupts or their assignces." Judgment for de-

And where the de-Credit and fendants were the holders of a bill of exchange accepted by one Maberly for 7601., which was indersed to them by the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Time and they were also the acceptors of a bill for 1000l. drawn by the Commer-when the cial Bank in favour of M.; and the former bill became due on the 6th Jan-Mutual uary and was dishonoured, M. having stopped payment; and on the 7th the Credit defendants debited the Commercial Bank in their accounts with them with the arose. 760l., and wrote a receipt on the back of the bill, and returned it protested to the Commercial Bank; and the latter hearing of his failure on the 6th wrote to the defendants requesting them to keep the 760l. bill and set off the amount against the 1000l., their acceptance, which would become due on the 12th; it was held, in an action by the assignces of M. (who afterwards became bankrupt) against the defendants as acceptors of the 1000l. bill, that they were not entitled to set off the 760l. bill, that bill having been legally satisfied as to them(p).

Since the act 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 50, has made all debts which it has declared to be proveable also liable to be set off, debts depending on a contingency may be set off (q).

A clear right of set-off cannot be destroyed by the conduct of the assignces in obtaining payment from a party ignorant of the bankruptcy(r).

VI. GENERAL EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY ON THE PROPERTY OF THE BANKRUPT AND OF OTHERS.

VI. General Effect of Bank-

In considering who may indorse a bill(s), and by and to whom payment may be made(t), several of the points relating to bankruptcy have necessarily been considered. A few others remain to be stated, which may be arranged under the following heads, as they relate to

- 1. The property of the bankrupt, and contracts entered into by him.
- 2. The property of others.

The uniform principle laid down by the courts upon this subject is, that 1. As to assignees take a bankrupt's property in the same situation, and subject to the the Properassignees take a bankrupt's property in the same situation, and subject to the same burthens as the bankrupt himself had it, and they "stand in his place, Bankrupt, and are bound by all acts fairly done by him in relation to his property, and and Conthat this remains in their hands subject to all equitable liens by which it was tracte en-

VI. Gene- affected in the hands of the bankrupt  $\limsup_{n \to \infty} u(n)$ . And though a chose in action cannot strictly be assigned at law, yet if a bankrupt, before his bankruptcy, for a valuable consideration, and without fraud, assign to a creditor a debt or bill of exchange or note, it will be binding on the assignees(x). And if a bill or note be not capable of delivery at the time, a transfer of it, without delivery, will be binding upon the assignees, provided notice of the assignment be given to the debtor(y). But as soon as the security is capable of being delivered, it must be handed over; for if it remain in the hands of the bankrupt, the assignees will be entitled to it(z). Where a trader delivered a bill for a valuable consideration to another, previously to an act of bankruptcy, and forgot to indorse it, it was held that he might indorse it after his bankruptcy(a). And if his assignees refuse, we have seen they may be compelled to do so(b). And if the bankrupt has no beneficial interest or valuable property in a bill, as where it is accepted by another for his accommodation, he may, after an act of bankruptcy, indorse it, so as to convey a right of action thereon to a third person against the accommodation ac-And in Willis v. Freeman(d), where the bill was drawn by the bankrupt partly for value and partly for accommodation, and he indorsed it after his act of bankruptcy to a creditor, it was held that the latter might recover on the bill the difference between the real debt, and the whole sum for which the bill was drawn. And assignees cannot, any more than the bankrupt himself could, hold property obtained by his fraud or crime(e); and therefore they have been held liable to restore money received by them upon bills, which he had got in return for one, of which he knew the acceptance was a forgery (f).

OF BANKRUPTCY.

So bills of exchange or promissory notes, indorsed by the bankrupt after he had dishonoured bills, and been otherwise irregular in his payments, may be retained by the indorsee, unless it were known to him at the time that be had committed an act of bankruptcy(g). So if a trader, after he has committed a secret act of bankruptcy, indorse a bill of exchange to a creditor, who receives the money due on the bill before a fiat issues against the trader, such payment is protected(h). And by the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 82, it is enacted, "that all payments really and bona fide made, or which shall hereafter be made by any bankrupt, or by any person on his behalf, before the date and issuing of the commission against such bankrupt, to any creditor of such bankrupt (such payment not being a fraudulent preference of such creditor), shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding any prior act of f *750 1 bankruptcy by *such bankrupt committed; and all payments really and bona fide made, or which shall hereafter be made to any bankrupt before the date and issuing of the commission against such bankrupt, shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding any prior act of bankruptcy by such bankrupt committed;

Where the bankrupt has accepted bills for goods which he has purchased, this does not divest the right of the vendor to stop the goods in transitu upon the bankruptcy of the vendee (l).

But bills or notes delivered by a bankrupt by way of fraudulent preference remain the property of the assignces, and the delivery constitutes an act of bankruptcy(m).

With respect to the property of others in the hands of a bankrupt, it is 2. As to frequently affected by his bankruptcy, either in the case of liens, or of his the Probeing reputed owner. A banker has a lien for the general balance due to others. him upon bills or notes in his hands paid in generally (n). So a person has a lien upon all property placed in his possession as a consideration for his acceptance of a bill, which he is liable to pay after the bankruptcy of the owner, who made the deposit(o).

Property in the possession of a bankrupt, though he be not the real owner, Bills paid will sometimes pass to his assignees, on the ground of his being reputed into a Bankers owner, under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 72; though property in the hands generally, of an agent is not in the reputed ownership of the principal(p). That they were not written short amounts to nothing, unless there be a concurrence manifested at the time, or to be inferred from the habits of dealing between the parties, that they were to be considered as cash; if they were there with the petitioner's knowledge as cash, and the drawing or entitled to draw upon them as having that credit in cash, he would thereby be precluded from recurring to them specifically; but it is upon them to prove that to be the case, and petitioner is therefore entitled, unless they have been carried to his credit as cash with Ex parte Peas and others, in the matter of Boldero, 1 Rose, 232; 19 Ves. 25. Bills remitted by a country bank to their banker in London, remaining at his bankruptcy in his hands undue or unapplied, according to the authority given, or afterwards coming to the hands of the assignees, and the proceeds received, restored, and paid to the remitters, taking up the acceptance on their account, and subject to the banker's lien for any balance by the contract, remaining the property of the remitters, in the hands of the banker, as agent for a particular purpose, namely, to hold until due, and receive the proceeds then first forming an item in the cash account. The circumstance of the bill being written short is only evidence of a trust, proved in this instance by express declaration, or other evidence equivalent. Entries in bankers' books not proved to have been communicated to the customer, not evidence against, but may be for him. The statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 11, not applicable to bills in the hands of a banker written short or sent for a particular purpose, the trust accounting for the possession being considered as goods in the hands of a factor, with the single distinction that he cannot pledge; but if the bills were dealt with before bankruptcy, the money cannot be followed,—as, if dealt with afterwards, may; S. Ex parte Buchanan, in the matter of Kensington, I Rose, 280. An order was made upon the provisional assignes to deliver up short bills in the hands of bankers at the time of their bankruptcy, the estate being indemnified against their outstanding acceptances on account of the petitioner.

Ex parte The Burton Bank, &c., 2 Rose, These were petitions presented in the bankruptcy of Messrs. Whitehead, Howard, and Co, bankers in London, by their correspondents in the country, for the purpose of having certain short bills of the petitioners, which were in the possession of the bankrupts at the time of the bankruptcy, delivered up, indemnifying the bankrupts estate against in liability for the petitioners. The right was considered so indisputable that the following orders were taken by consent.

Ex parte Harford. The provisional assignee to retain the cash balances and the cash received, and on the short bills paid, and also a sufficient number of short bills unpaid to cover the amount of Whitehead & Co.'s acceptances, and he is to deliver over to Harford and Co. the residue of the said bills, notes, and securities. It is further understood, that the cash and notes retained are to be given up as Harford and Co. produce the acceptances cancelled.

Ex parte The Burton Bank. The provisional assignee consents that all bills, &c. shall be delivered up upon the petitioner leaving such sum as together with the cash balance equals the acceptances outstanding. Note.—An extent had been issued on the part of the crown; but there was enough to satisfy it without resorting to the short bills, nor were they scheduled among the property seized under it. See Ex parte Rowton, 1 Rose, 15, (Chit. j. 808).

As to bankruptcy, and are not then due, will pass to his assignees, but remain the the Proproperty of the party who remitted them (t). So on an agreement between perty of an American and English house to purchase American bank shares, and others. send them to England for sale, and draw bills on the English house for the amount, if the English house become bankrupt before the shares arrive, the indorsees are entitled to have the produce applied to retire the bills, and the shares are not in the reputed ownership of the bankrupts, being clothed with a trust, viz. to retire the bills (u). And the assignees of an agent cannot retain bills sent to the agent before his bankruptcy, but received afterwards, and accompained by a letter directing the bill to be appropriated to a particular creditor, who received notice thereof (x). And we have seen, that if A., a merchant, remit a bill to B., another merchant, to get discounted, and apply the proceeds, the property in the bill and proceeds remain in A. or his assignees, and B. cannot set off a debt due to him(u); and this has been so held, notwithstanding that the banker, according to custom, enters the bill as cash in his customer's accounts, charging interest for the time they have to run, provided the balance of the cash account at the time of the bankruptcy be in favour of the customer(z). And where A. accepted bills to enable B. to make shipments to Sydney, on an agreement known at Sydney to apply the return proceeds in payment of the bills; and on the last shipment, B. sent notice to Sydney to send the proceeds direct to A., and gave the same notice to a partner of the Sydney house, who happened to be in London; and before the notice arrived at Sydney the return proceeds were sent off to B., who became bankrupt, and his assignees received them, it was held, that such proceeds were not to be considered as in the reputed ownership of B., but that A. was entitled thereto(a).

If a customer pay hills not due into his bankers in the country, whose practice it is to credit their customers for the amount of such bills, if approved, as cash (charging interest), he is entitled to recover back such bills in specie from the bankers on their becoming bankrupt, provided the balance of his cash account, independent of such bills, be in his favour at the time of the bankruptcy; and if payment be afterwards received upon such bills by the assignees, they are *liable to refund it to the customer in an action for money had and [ *753] received(b). And in that case Lord Ellenborough observed, that "every man who pays bills not due into the hands of the banker, places them there as in the hands of his agent, to obtain payment of them when due. If the banker discount the bill, or advance money upon the credit of it, that alters the case; he then acquires the entire property in it, or has a lien on it pro tanto for his advance. VI. General Effect of Bankruptcy.

2. As to the Property of others.

London and country bankers in this respect is, that the former, if overdrawn, has a lien on the bill deposited with him, though not indorsed; whereas the country banker, who always takes the bill indorsed, has not only a lien upon it if his account be overdrawn, but has also his legal remedy upon the bill by the indorsement; but neither of them can have any lien on such bills until their account he overdrawn: and here the balance of the cash account at the time of the bankruptcy was in favour of the plaintiffs(c)." Where, therefore, bills of exchange are paid by a customer into his bankers, and entered as cash, with a distinct interest account, and he has credit to the amount of the bills so entered, but in fact never overdraws his account, the bills not due at the date of the bankruptcy of the bankers, or the proceeds received by the assignees, belong to the customer(d). So the proprietor of short bills, who deposits them in the hands of his bankers, desiring them to be kept and presented for acceptance when due, is entitled to be paid in full out of the proceeds of such bills, or out of such property as may have been relieved by the application of the proceeds of those bills: and the fact of the [ *754 ] bankers having placed *the bills as cash to the credit of the proprietor, is not sufficient to raise a presumption that the ownership of the bills was transferred to the bankers: nor is proof under the fiat for the amount of one of the bills any waiver of his right to payment in full(e). In one case the proceeds of short bills were ordered to be returned, unless upon inquiry it should appear, that with the knowledge of the party depositing them, or from the habits of dealing between the parties, they were to be considered as cash, the onus of which was to be upon the banker (f); and in another case, where a

(d) Ex parte Benson, 1 Mont. & Bl. 120, reversing an order of the Vice-Chancellor. There was evidence of a custom in the country to circulate short bills, but no express authority given by the customer to the banker to circulate the bills in question as cash.

Ex parte Ellis and others, In re Sir George Duckett and Co. Court of Review April 16, 1932, MS. When Bankers holding short bills, the property of a customer, become bankrupt, the customer may on petition obtain an order for the accountant-general delivering such bill to him to enable him to proceed thereon. Montagu said, that before the court entered upon its regular cause paper, he wished to make an application in a case of short bills, which were always rather pressing. The petition was against the official assignee and creditors, assignees of Sir George Duckett and Co., bankers. It stated, that a fiat having been issued against the bankrupts on the 22d of March last, the assignee, under an order of the court, dated the 24th of March, took possession of divers bills, exchequer bills, public securities, plate, jewels, and other effects, the private property of the customers of the bankrupts. The official assignee detained in his custody all bills in the nature of short bills, in order that he might present them for payment and return the proceeds, subject to further order. Un the 5th of April, in pursuance of the order of the 24th of March, he presented for payment such bills as were due, retained the proceeds, and paid into the Bank of England all other monies, bills, and negotiable instruments belonging to the estate. Several of the last had become due, but bad not been paid, and remained in the hands of the accountant-general, who declined to return them to the petitioners without the order and authority of the court. The petitioners, therefore, prayed that the accountant-general might be directed to deliver to them, not only such bills as were already due and dishonoured, but such as might become so hereafter, so that they might enforce payment at law, and make over the proceeds to the parties entitled to them. The retention on the part of the accountantgeneral was rather hard, for by want of notice the value of the bills might not be recoverable from the different indorsers.

His honour the chief judge said that there ought to have been no difficulty in such a case, for there was a general order that upon the dis-honour of any bill it should be restored to the official assignee.

Mr. Montagu said that he had no doubt of a general rule being found necessary to regulate the matter, but he rather dwelt upon this, as it was the first cause of the kind. Prayer of petition granted. See the General Orders, post, Appendix.

So in the case Ex parte Sayers(h), where A. abroad, commissioned B. in London to send him foreign coin, with particular directions as to the manner and time of sending it, and remitted bills, which B. discounted; and the coin required not being procurable in England, B. sent two remittances, not equal to the amount of A.'s bills, to Lisbon for the purpose of procuring it, with directions, if it could not be had, to return the bills; and the coin not being to be had, bills nearly to the amount of the remittance to Lisbon, not indorsed by the correspondent there, were returned, and, B. in the interval becoming bankrupt, were received by his assignees; A. was held to have a right to those bills under the particular circumstances, the Lord Chancellor expressing much doubt whether such right would exist in the case of remittance to buy goods in the way of trade.

And on the same principle, in Hassall v. Smithers(i) it was held, that a remittance in bills and notes for a specific purpose, viz. to answer acceptances received by the administrator in consequence of the death of the party to whom it was remitted, was not general assets, the specific purpose operating as a lien, which would also be the effect upon a bankruptcy.

If a London banker, having a branch bank at Edenburgh, stop payment in London, and after the stoppage, but before notice, a customer pay into the branch bank at Edenburgh bank notes and cash to be remitted to London, and at that time the London banker is indebted to the branch bank; and the branch bank after notice, in pursuance of a special direction from the London banker, receive money from different agents of the London banker for the purpose of forwarding to London; and a fiat issue against the London banker, at which period the monies in the hands of the branch bank are more than sufficient to cover the amount due to it from the London banker, but the amount which it has at the time of the notice of the stoppage, including the bank notes, is insufficient, and the customer require the branch bank to return the bank notes, which it does not comply with; and the branch bank refuse to pay any part of the money to the assignees, and the Court of Session in Scotland order the branch bank to pay, without prejudice, the balance of monies, after deducting in the mean time the amount due to it, to the assignees, which it does: and afterwards, *it appearing clear [ *755] that the branch bank is not entitled to retain any part of the sum which it received from the different agents of the London banker after notice, the branch bank pay to the assignees the difference between the sum paid to the assignees under the order of the Court of Session, and the amount so received from the different agents, the assignees must refund to the customer the amount so paid in by him(k). And if such London banker and the Scotch National Bank have, through the branch bank of the London banker, mutually exchanged their notes at stated times, pursuant to established custom,

In like manner, money transmitted to the branch bank for the purpose of withdrawing an acceptance, but which is not done in consequence of the London banker's bankruptcy, may be recovered back from the assignees if allowed by them in account with the branch bank(m). Where, however, according to a custom of exchanging acceptances which existed between the bankrupt and other houses. through the agency of the branch bank, notes were sent by a party to this branch bank, but never exchanged, as bankruptcy intervened, and they were stolen from the branch bank, and never formed any item in any settlement of accounts between the branch bank and the assignees; it was held that such party could not recover the value of the notes from the assignees (n).

But Bills delivered to be discounted

But if the holder of bills deliver them to a banker, expressly on the terms of discount, or if by the course of dealing between the customer and banker, bills received by the latter are understood by both parties as cash minus the pass to the discount, and the customer is at liberty to draw on account thereof, beyond the amount of cash in the hands of the banker, then in the event of the bankruptcy of the banker, the assignees are entitled to the bills(o). So where a [ *756 ] person having three bills of exchange, *applied to a country banker with whom he had no previous dealing to give for them a bill on London of the Carstairs and others, Assignees of Kensington v. Bates, 3 Campb. 301, (Chit. j. 877). Where bankers discount a bill of exchange for a customer, giving him credit for the amount of the bill, and debiting him with the discount, the bill becomes the property of the bankers. and upon their bankruptcy their assignees 1: ay maintain an action upon it, although there be no balance due from them to the customer. Per Lord Ellenborough. "Is is meant seriously to contest the right of the assignees to re-cover in this action? The bankers were the purchasers of this bill. They did not receive it as the agents of Allport. The whole proper-ty and interest in the bill vested in themselves, and they stood all risks from the moment of the discount. If the bill had been afterwards stolen or burnt, theirs would have been the loss. In Giles v. Perkins, the bankers were mere depositaries, with a lien when the account was overdrawn. The customer there drew on the credit of the bills deposited. Here Allport might have drawn out the amount of the bill, deducting the discount as actual cash, in the same manner as if he had dishonoured the bill with a third person, and then paid in the amount in bank notes. The discount makes the bankers complete purchasers of the bill. The transaction was completed;-they had no lien but the thing itself;—the bill was as much theirs as any chattel they possessed. This very distinction was taken in the case cited; for it was there said, if the banker discount the bill, or advance money on the credit of it, that alters the case; he then acquires the entire property in it, or has a lien on it pro tanto for his advance. Verdict for plaintiff.

So in Payley P. & A. 72, it is laid down thus:-- "But in order to prevent the effect of the bankrupt laws from attaching negotiable securities in the hands of a bankrupt agent, there must be a specific appropriation of them, as by lodging of bill for bill, or by the deposit of several in one entire transaction, to answer a particular purpose; for if they are paid in from time to time, upon a general running account, they become the effects of the person to whom they were so paid, and are not reclaimable. The doctrine is thus generally stated by Lord Hardwicke:- 'If bills are sent by a correspondent to a merchant here to be received, and the money to be applied to a particular use, and the merchant becomes bankrupt before the money is received on the bills, the correspondent has a special lien in respect of those bills, and the money shall not be divided amongst the creditors at large. But where bills are sent on a general account between the correspondent and the merchant, and as an item in the account, it is otherwise." Bent v. Puller, 5 T. R. 494; and see Thompson v. Giles, 2 B. & C. 422; 3 Dowl. & Ry. 733, (Chit. j. 1190); ante, 211, 212, 754.

Of Discharge un-759 der an In-760 solvent AcL

A party to a bill or note, who has afterwards become insolvent, may be Of Disdischarged from liability under the provisions of one of the statutes relating der an In-The last of these acts containing general provisions, solvent to insolvent debtors (q). is the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, ss. 40, 46, 60, 61, (re-enacted 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, Act, and ss. 69, 75, 90, 91). All the insolvent acts having been passed with the Geo. 4, c. same object, are to be construed with the same liberality, and in general the 57, and 1 decisions upon one act will be applicable to the other containing a similar & Vict. a. enactment; therefore it may be expedient shortly to consider the cases on particular. the former acts(q). In a case where after the 1st July, 1809, mentioned in the Insolvent Debtors' Act, 49 Geo. 3, c. 115, a promissory note was given for an antecedent debt, it was decided, that as against the payee, the maker would have been discharged under this act, but that he was not as against a person to whom the note was subsequently bona fide indersed (r). And where the creditor of an insolvent debtor, who had petitioned under the Insolvent Debtor's Act, obtained from his debtor whilst in prison a bill of exchange for his debt, and indorsed it to an innocent holder for valuable consideration, it was held, that though this might be a *fraudulent [ *757] preference of the creditor, the insolvent's discharge was no bar to an action upon the bill by the innocent indorsee(s).

By the Insolvent Act, 1 Geo. 4, c. 19, s. 6, the insolvent was required to deliver in a schedule containing a full and true description of every person to whom he was indebted, or who to his knowledge or belief claimed to be his creditor, together with the nature and amount of such debts and claims; and it was held to be enough for him to give in his schedule a description of his debt, sufficient to notify to the creditor that he had applied to be discharged in respect of that debt; and therefore, where the insolvent had ordered coals of A. B., who resided at N. in Monmouthshire, and the invoices had been made out in the name of the Argood Coal Company, which in fact consisted of two partners only, one of whom had never been named to the insolvent as having a share in the concern, and the insolvent in his schedule described a debt of 821. due to A. B., of N. in Monmouthshire, for coals, in respect of which it was stated that A. B. held a security which was the subject of the present action; and the debt due to the plaintiffs was 821. 24. 6d.: it was held that the schedule contained a sufficient description of the names of the persons to whom the insolvent was indebted, and the amount of the debt within the meaning of that statute(t). So under the same act, where the defendant being indebted to A. for goods sold, accepted a bill drawn by A. for the amount, which became due in October, 1823; and before that time the defendant became insolvent, and presented his petition to be discharged, and in his schedule stated that he was indebted to A. for goods, and that A. held his acceptance for the amount, which became due in October, 1223; and A. had indorsed the bill to B., but the insolvent was ignorant of that fact; and B. having brought an action against the insolvent upon the bill, the latter pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act: it was held that the schedule contained a true description of the person to whom the insolvent was indebted, within the meaning of the act(u).

The Insolvent Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss.

The last Insolvent Act applicable to this subject is the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, ss. 40, 46, 60, 61, (re-enacted 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 69, 75, 90, 91). The 40th section enacts, "That every prisoner who shall apply for relief, 46, 60, 61, shall, within the time therein specified, deliver into the court a schedule containing a full and fair description of such prisoner, as to his name, trade, or profession, together with his last usual place of abode, and the place or 69, 75, 90, places where he resided during the time when his debts were contracted, and also a full and true description of all debts due or growing due from such prisoner at the time of filing such petition, and of all and every person and persons to whom such prisoner shall be indebted, or who to his or her knowledge or belief shall claim to be his creditors, together with the nature and amount of such debts and claims respectively, distinguishing such as shall be admitted from such as shall be disputed; and the said schedule is to be [ *758] *subscribed by the prisoner, and filed in the said court, together with all books, papers, deeds, and writings in any way relating to such prisoner's

Sect. 46. The court is then to adjudge that such prisoner shall be discharged from custody and entitled to the benefit of the act, at such time as the said court or commissioner or justices shall direct, in pursuance of the provisions thereinafter contained in that behalf, as to the several debts and sums of money(x) due or claimed to be due at the time of filing such prisoner's petition from such prisoner to the several persons named in his or her schedule as creditors, or claiming to be creditors for the same respectively, or for which such person shall have given credit to such prisoner before the time of filing such petition, and which were not then payable, and as to the claims of all other persons not known to such prisoner at the time of such adjudication, who may be indorsees or holders of any negotiable security set forth in such schedule so sworn to as aforesaid.

of a bill or note, give a correct description of the instrument itself, it will And where an insolvent stated a bill in his schedule as drawn by himself on M., whereas it was drawn by M. on him, it was held, that if the jury description were satisfied that the same bill was meant, and that the misdescription was by mistake, it was sufficient (b). So where in an action by the payee against one of the makers of a joint and several promissory note, to which the defendant pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Act, and it appeared that no notice of the defendant's intention to apply for his discharge was given to the plaintiff, but that the note was drawn by the other maker, and signed by the defendant for his accommodation, it would be for the jury to say whether the defendant knew to whom the note was made payable; for if he did, notice would be necessary, but otherwise not(c). And if an insolvent debtor who inserts in his schedule the name of the holder of a bill of exchange on which he is liable, or gives such other description of it as satisfies the statute, he is discharged as to all the parties to the bill (although they are not named in the schedule) and also as to the original debt for which it was a security(d). [ *760 ] But if an insolvent debtor knows at the time of *filing his schedule that a bill of exchange has been indorsed to a particular person some time before, he is bound to give notice to that person, although he cannot tell whether he comtinues to be the holder at the time of filing the schedule(e). 13. Per Parke, B. "The case of Macdonald v. Bovington (3 M. & Sel. 91) turned on the provisions of the Lords' Act, the intention of which was not to discharge the defendant from the debt, but only his person from imprisonment. The scope and provisions of the Insolvent Debtors' Act are very different: when the insolvent has inserted the debt fairly and properly in his schedule, he is discharged as to the debt itself, and not merely as to the particular creditors named in the schedule. I think this conclusion necessarily follows from a comparison of the 46th and 61st sections. Section 46 empowers the court to adjudge that the prisoner shall be discharged from custody, and entitled to the benefit of the act, 'as to the several debts or sums of money,'-not as to the several creditors- due or claimed to be due at the time of filing such prisoner's petition from such prisoner to the several persons named in his schedule as creditors, and as to the claims of all other persons not known to such prisoner at the time of such adjudication, who may be indersees or holders of any negotiable security set forth in such schedule.' The object of the latter part of the clause is, that where the prisoner is indebted on a negotiable security, and where he could not be reasonably expected to know the name of the holder, he may be discharged without stating the name, provided the instrument itself be sufficiently described in the schedule, so as to satisfy the court that he has given a true description of it. That appears to me the rational and plain construction of the 46th section, and it is confirmed by the 61st, which provides that after the party shall have become entitled to the benefit of the act, no writ of fi. fa. or clegit shall issue on any judgment obtained against him for any debt or sum of money with respect to which he shall have so become entitled, nor in any action on any new contract or security for payment thereof. This view agrees with the construction put by the court on former insolvent acts, not containing a similar clause to that at the end of section 46, expressly enabling the insolvent to describe negotiable securities without stating the holders' names.' And see Bishop v. Polhill, 1 Mood. & Rob. 368; ante, 759, note (a)

 $(k_j)$ (1) 1 been indorsed, this would be a bar to an action by the indorsee: but that if Of Disthe insolvent had been told that the bill was in the hands of the indorsee, the charge uninsolvent would be still liable, although the jury might think he had forgotten solvent what he had been told, and that his attorney had made inquiries as to who Act held the bill, with a view of putting such holder's name into the insolvent's The Insolschedule(f). So where in an action against the acceptor of a bill of ex-vent Act, change, who pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, the 7 Geo. 4, change, who pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act, the 7 Geo. 4, and defendant having misdescribed the holder in his schedule, and there being 1 & 2 Vict. some evidence tending to shew that he knew the holder at the time, it was c. 110. beld, that the true question for the jury was, whether he did so know the holder(g).

With respect, however, to the notice to be given to the creditors after filing the insolvent's petition and schedule, it is to be observed, that under the 42d section of 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, (re-enacted in 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 71), it is for the court to cause such notice to be given, and that the giving of such notice is not a condition precedent to the insolvent's discharge; and, therefore, in an action on a bill of exchange, a replication that the plaintiff had received no notice of the filing of the defendant's petition, though he was resident in England, and might have been served with such notice, is no answer to a plea of the defendant's discharge under this act(h).

We have seen that the 60th section of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, enables a Effect of judge to discharge a person from arrest for a preceding debt, and that the 61st new Consection provides, that no fieri facias or elegit shall issue in respect of any new tract. contract or security for payment of a debt from which the insolvent has been discharged under the act. And, *therefore, where the defendant and [ *761] a third party as his surety signed a promissory note, and the defendant was afterwards discharged under the insolvent act, and the payee applied to the surety for payment, whereupon the defendant, to prevent the surety being sued, joined him in a new note, it was held, in an action by the payee, that he could not recover on this note against the defendant, as it was a new contract for the old debt, though the new consideration of forbearance to the surety was added(i). So where an insolvent debtor was remanded for six months at the suit of G., and, during his imprisonment, A., the attorney of G., agreed with him that he should be discharged on giving A. a bill of exchange for a part of G.'s debt, and an I. O. U. for A.'s bill of costs in the action, which he gave, and was liberated accordingly; it was held that the insolvent could not be sued either on the bill of exchange or on the I. O. U. for although the remission of the remaining portion of the insolvent's imprisonment might form a new consideration, it was, notwithstanding, a new contract for the old debt within the 61st section; and as to the costs, they constituted a debt due to the plaintiff's clients, and, consequently, were equally barred by the discharge (k). But according to the decisions upon the prior acts (l), and upon this act, a bona fide holder of a note given after the dis-

Best v Barker, 8 Price, 533, where a debtor was discharged under the insolvent act of 1781, and afterwards gave a promissory note for a debt due before, it was held, that there was a good consideration for such note, and that he might be sued thereon by the payee. charge in payment of a preceding debt, may recover the amount if he receivcharge un- ed it without collusion and without notice; though it is incumbent on such holder to prove that he gave full value before the note was due, and without collusion(m). And a party who seeks to avail *himself of a discharge un-[ *762] der the insolvent act, as a defence to an action on a bill or note given for an antecedent debt, is bound to do so in the first instance; and if instead of pleading his discharge he give a warrant of attorney to secure the payment, the court will not set it aside(n).

Bill or Note ration of not opposing Insolvent's disgal.

If a bill or note be given in consideration of not opposing the insolvent's in conside- discharge, it is illegal and void in the hands of the party who knew of the illegality when he received it(o).

(m) In Northam v. Latouche, 4 Car. & P. charge ille- 140, it was held, that to justify the jury in giving a verdict for the plaintiff in an action against an insolvent debtor by the indorsee of a bill of exchange, accepted by such debtor as a security for a debt due to the indorser, and from which he had been discharged under the Insolvent Debtor's Act, they must be satisfied not only that the plaintiff gave value for the bill, but that he took it bond fide for his own purposes, without any concert with the indorser, and without any knowledge of the defect in the indorser's title. It was further held, that the provision in the 76th section of the 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, that a certified copy of the petition, schedule, order of adjudication, &c. 44 shall at all times be admitted in all courts whatever, as adflicient evidence of the same, does not take away the right of producing in evidence the original order of adjudication procared from the court.

Tindal, C. J. (in summing up) said, "There are only two questions for your consideration, first, whether this bill of exchange was given to satisfy an old debt which had been barred by a discharge under the Insolvent Debtors' Act; and, secondly, whether, if it were so, it was taken by Northam for a valuable consideration bona fide, and for his own purposes, without any concert with Hudson the drawer. any concert with Hudson the drawer. As to the first point the evidence is quite clear. In point of principle, if the statute only had the effect of protecting persons who have been discharged under its provisions from being sued by the individual to whom a new security for an old debt was given, it would but ill provide for its intention; for a third person might stand by and see the security given, and then take it and sue upon it. Therefore such a security remains as it were with a mark upon it, unless it is taken by a third person innocently, and in the ordinary exercise of the concerns of business. The question for you on this part of the case is, whether Mr. Northam and Mr. Hudson are distinct persons, or acting in concert in this transaction. With respect to the state of intoxication in which the defendant is said to have been when he accepted the bill, I do not think that is for you to consider, because I think it would be no answer, unless the plaintiff were shewn in some way or other to be conusant of such airuation. In order to entitle the plaintiff to recover, you must be satisfied that he gave value for the bill, and that it was not intended that it should be handed back in the event of the action's not succeeding: you must be satisfied that he took it bona fide for his own purposes, without being conscious of any defect in the transaction—as a common discount—as man would deal with man in the ordinary transactions of life. It appears that Hudson being asked, whether he told Northam who Latouche was, made this reply, that Northam knew that before. Taking all the facts of the case together, you will ask yourselves whether this bill was taken by the plaintiff (he having paid full value for it) with a knowledge of the latent defect in the title, or the contrary, and according as your opinion is upon that point, you will find your ver-dict for the plaintiff or the defendant." Verdict for the defendant.

Moore, 97; 2 Bing. 441, S. C. An insolvent debtor applied for his discharge under the statute 1 Geo. 4, c. 119, and gave a creditor who threatened to oppose him a promissory note for the amount of his debt; and he accordingly withdrew his opposition; and the insolvent after his discharge was arrested on the note, but settled the action by giving a warrant of attorney for the debt and costs, payable by instalments. The court set aside the warrant of attorney, and ordered an instalment paid by the insolvent to be returned to him, on the ground that the note and warrant of attorney were contrary to the policy of the statute, and operated as a fraud on the other creditors. And the same point was decided under the present Insolvent Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. 57; ante, 93. And see Horn v. lon, 4 Ad. & El. 78; 1 Nev. & Man. 627, S. C.; ante, 788, note (u).

notes and bills. Before this repealing act, the principal statutes in force re- I. Enactlating to bills of exchange and notes, were the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s, 1, (made ments perpetual by 9 Geo. 2, *c. 18); the 31 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 78, extending the Forgery. 2 Geo. 2, to forgery, with intent to defraud any corporation; the 7 Geo. 2, c. [ *765] 22, and 18 Geo. 3, c. 18, and the consolidating Act, 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 1.

The above act, 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, is intituled, "An act 11 Geo. 4. for reducing into one act all such forgeries as shall henceforth be punished and I Will.

4, c. 66. with death, and for otherwise amending the laws relative to forgery." The first section enacts, that no forgeries or other offences of that nature, which were then capital, shall continue so unless expressly made capital by that act, and that all forgeries theretofore capital, and not declared so by that act, shall be punished only with transportation or less punishment, with a reservation of offences relating to the coin. This statute, however, so far as regards the punishment of death, has since been altered by the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, and 7 Will. 4 and 1 Vict. c. 84, the former taking away capital punishment in all cases of forgery, except the forgery of wills and certain powers of attorney, and substituting transportation for life; and the latter altogether abolishing capital punishment in such cases, without any exception, and substituting transportation for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years, nor less than two years.

The third section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, enacts, "That if Forging an any person shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, Bill, Eaknowing the same to be forged or altered, any exchequer bill or exchequer chequer debenture, or any indorsement on or assignment of any exchequer bill or Debenexchequer debenture, or any bond under the common seal of the United India Company of Merchants of England trading to the East Indies, commonly Bond, called an East India bond, or any indorsement on or assignment of any Bank Note, Will, Bill East India bond, or any note or bill of exchange of the Governor and Com- of Expany of the Bank of England, commonly called a bank note, a bank bill change, of exchange, or a bank post bill, or any indorsement on or assignment Note, or of any bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or any will, tes- Warrant or tament, codicil, or testamentary writing, or any bill of exchange, or any Order for promissory note for the payment of money, or any indorsement on or assign- Payment ment of any bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, capital. or any acceptance of any bill of exchange, or any undertaking, warrant, or order for the payment of money, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to defraud any person whatsoever, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and, being convicted thereof, shall suffer death(a) as a felon."

Sect. 4 enacts, "That where by any act now in force any person is made If any inliable to the punishment of death for forging or altering, or for offering, ut-however tering, disposing of, or putting off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, designatany instrument or writing designated in such act by any special name or de- ed, is in Law a Bill scription, and such instrument or writing, however designated, is in law, a of Exwill, testament, codicil, or testamentary writing, or bill of exchange or a change, promissory note for the payment of money, or an indorsement on or assignment of a bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, or such Inan acceptance of a bill of exchange, or an undertaking, warrant, or order for strument the payment of money, within the true intent and meaning of this act, in eve- may be in-

Language in what respect asme as before, or otheravise.

It will be observed, that the offence of forging or knowingly uttering, &c. a forged instrument, is described in the present act by nearly and substan-Observa-tions on 11 tially the same words as in the former acts, and consequently the decisions Geo. 4 & 1 upon those acts will in general be applicable to the present, and it might Will. 4, c. suffice to refer to the former criminal works on the subject(e). It must, however, be kept in view, that the terms of the former acts were, "shall of this Act falsely make, forge, counterfeit, or alter, or shall offer, dispose of or put away any false, forged, counterfeited, or altered bill of exchange, or shall utter or publish as true any false, &c.(f)," whereas in the present act the words are. "shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any," &c. omitting the words "falsely make," and "counterfeit;" consequently those words should be omitted in an indictment founded on the last act, and the words "put off," are to be used instead of "put away," in describing the uttering any forged instrument. The 4th section also of the present act declares, "that if any instrument, however designated, is in law a bill of exchange, &c. the person forging or uttering such instrument may be indicted under this act."

As to the Instrument forged. J *773]

The description in the statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 56, s. 3, of the instrument or act forged is "any note or bill of exchange of the governor and company of the Bank of England, commonly called *a bank note, a bank bill of exchange, or a bank post bill, or any indorsement on or assignment of any bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill," or "any bill of exchange, or any promissory note, for the payment of money, or any indorsement on an assignment of any bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money," "or any acceptance of any bill of exchange," "or any undertaking, warrant, or order for the payment of money," with intent, &c.; and the 4th section provides, "that if any instrument, however design nated, is in law a bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, or an indorsement on or assignment of a bill or note, or an acceptance or an order for the payment of money, within the true intent and meaning of this act, he may be indicted accordingly."

Decisions upon or applicable to 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4, c. 66.

change within 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, although it was not such an instrument as I. Enactthe 35 Geo. 3, c. 94, warranted(g); and though uttering a forged note of a menta Scotch corporation, such as the British Linen Company, was held not an Forgery. offence within the meaning of the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, it has been considered Decisions that it might be within the 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 8(h). The forging or ut- upon or aptering in England of bills and notes, in whatever language, payable out of plicable to England, and the aiding, abetting, or counselling such crime, is declared as and I Will. criminal and punishable as if the instrument were payable in England(i).

Under the former acts it was held (and such decision appears to be applicable to the present) that the instrument forged must be seemingly genuine, and (with the exception of the stamp) have been so framed, as if genuine, to be valid, and operate against and bind the supposed parties, as a bill, note, &c. and that where the false instrument does not carry on the face of it the semblance of a legal instrument, for which it was counterfeited, or where it is illegal in its very frame, the offence will not be a forgery (k); as if the forged bill or note be on the face of it payable on a contingency (l), or out of a particular fund(m), or for the performance of any other act than the payment of money, as a promissory note engaging "to take this note as 11. 10s. on demand in part of a 21. note,"(n) or in the alternative for the payment of money, or delivering bank notes or bonds(0), or for the payment of less than 51., and not made pursuant to the statute 17 Geo. 3, c. 30, regulating the form of small bills and notes(p). So the false making or uttering a note without any maker's name subscribed is not forgery (q). So where a man was indicted for forging an instrument, which was in one count treated as a bank note and in another as a promissory note, in the following form, "I promise to pay J. W. Esq. or bearer ten pounds, London, March 4, 1776. For Self and Company, of my bank in England 101., entered, John Jones," Lord Mansfield held that this offence was not forgery; and it will be observed, that here no person appeared to subscribe the note as maker, John Jones' name being *merely stated as the party entering the note(r). So where [*774] the prisoner was convicted of a misdemeanor, as for an offence at common law for disposing of a forged promissory note as follows, "Blackburn Bank, I promise to take this as thirty shillings on demand in part of a two-pound note, value received, for C. B. and Co., R. C.;" the judges held the conviction wrong, for this instrument could not in any legal sense be denominated a promissory note, for it was not for the payment of money, but a promise to take that note in payment, and as the consideration was not expressed, it was nudum pactum(s).

So omissions in a forged bill or note, in other respects legal and sufficient, have been fatal to indictments for forgery; as where the prisoner drew a bill upon the treasurer of the navy, payable to ---, or order, and signed it in the name of a navy surgeon, it was held, that, to constitute an order for the payment of money, there must be a payee, and that a direction to pay - or order, was not sufficient, and the instrument invalid, though we have seen that for civil purposes any bonû fide holder might insert his own name as payee(t). This case appears to proceed on the same ground that forging a will of lands, with only two witnesses, is not an offence, because without three witnesses it was inoperative as respects land(u). But it has been held, that it is not necessary that the forged instrument should exactly resemble and have the appearance of a real one, perfect in all formal respects, provided it be substantially correct x). It is sufficient, to subject a prisoner to an indictment for forgery, that the instrument was calculated to impose on mankind in general, though an individual skilled in that kind of writing would Thus, if it appear that several persons have probably detect its fallacy. taken forged bank notes as good ones, the offender will be deemed guilty of forging them, though a person from the bank should swear that they would never have imposed on him, being in several respects out of the usual form(y); and it has been holden, that a bank note may be counterfeited, though the paper do not contain the usual water-mark(z); for in forgery there need not be an exact resemblance, but it is sufficient if the instrument counterfeited be prima facie fitted to pass for the writing which it represents, and deceives persons using ordinary observation(a); and therefore where a forged bank note was in this form-" I promise to pay Mr. I. C. or bearer, on demand, the sum of fifty," omitting the word pounds, but in the margin was inserted "£fifty," the prisoner being convicted of this forgery, a majority of the twelve judges held the conviction right, and that it was a matter to be left to the jury, whether the instrument purported to be a note for fifty pounds, or any other sum(b). And in order to constitute forgery on a promissory note, it is not necessary that it should contain the words "or order," rendering it negotiable (c); and the forging a bill payable to the prisoner's own order, and uttering it without indorsement and without its appearing to have been accepted, is a complete offence (d); and uttering a forged bill, importing to be payable to the drawer's order, with intent to defraud, is a complete offence, though there be no *indorsement upon it purporting to be the So an instrument drawn by A. upon B., requiring him to pay to the order of C. a certain sum at a certain time "without acceptance" is a bill of exchange, and may be so described in an indictment for forgery (f). But it seems if the prisoner write another person's name across a blank stamp, on which, after he is gone, a third person who is in league with him, writes a bill of exchange, this is not a forgery of the acceptance of a bill of exchange by the prisoner(g).

As to what constituted "a warrant or order for payment of money, or delivery of goods," within the meaning of the 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, (and which will be still applicable to the 3d and 10th sections of the present act) it has been holden, that a draft or check upon a banker is a warrant or order for the payment of money within the statute(h); and even a bill of exchange has been so holden(i); so an order to pay "all my prize money due to me I. Enactfor my services on board his Majesty's ship Leander," without specifying ments any particular sum, was holden to be within the same act(k). A letter of Forgery. credit, on which the correspondents of the writer of it, having funds in his Decisions or their possession, apply them to the use of the party in whose favour it is upon or apgiven, is a warrant for the payment of money within the meaning of the stat-plicable to ute 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 3(1). The order must appear to have been signed 11 Geo. 4 by some person who might command the payment of the money, and to call 4, c. 66. on a person who is compellable to obey it(m). And therefore an order to a tradesman, to let the bearer have certain goods, which it was optional with Warrant the tradesman to obey or not, was holden not to be within the act(n). or Order But a forged draft on a banker, in a fictitious name, or in the name of a per- for Pay-But a lorged draft on a banker, in a jicilious name, or in the name of a person who never kept cash with the banker, is a warrant or order within the Money, meaning of the act, for it imports upon the face of it to be an order by a per- &c. son having authority to make it(o). Though where a party obtains goods upon his own draft on a banker with whom he does not keep cash, he can only be indicted for obtaining goods by false pretences, or (where several have been concerned) for a conspiracy(p). It was formerly considered necessary that the order should be addressed to the person having possession of the money or goods(q), but recent decisions have established that such address is unnecessary (r).

Before the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, it was held, that the document forged must seem or appear to give to the bearer a disposing power *over the property which he demands; that it must assume to transfer the right at least of the custody of the money or goods to the offender, and not be a mere request to a third person to deliver the articles, which he might refuse if he pleased(s). But the 10th section of that statute expressly uses the word "request," and it has been held that a forged paper addressed to a tradesman, and purporting to be signed by one of his customers in the following form-" Please to let bearer, William Gof, have spillshoul and grafting tool for me," is a forged request for the delivery of goods within that act(t). So a forged paper in the following form,—"Mr. T.—Please to let the lad have a hat about 9s., and I will answer for the money. C. B.," is a forged request for the delivery of goods, and is not the less so because it may also be a forged undertaking for the payment of money within the third section of the act(u). Nor is it necessary that the instrument should be addressed to any particular person by name in order to constitute a request within that statute(v). The instrument, however, must import on the face of it to be a request; and if the words have not necessarily that effect, but are so understood in trade, there must, when the instrument is set out(w), be an innuendo to explain them(x). And although when an order is so drawn as to induce a belief in the person to whom it is uttered that it will be complied with, the offence is within the act, though it could no deceive the party on whom it was drawn; yet if it seems to leave the compliance optional, and applies rather to the favour than the justice of the person to whom it is addressed, it is not within the meaning of the statute, because the individual taking ought not to have placed any reliance on its credit(y). Thus a note as from an overseer of the poor to a tradesman, desiring him to deliver goods to the prisoner, is not an object of forgery within So where the prisoner drew a bill, " Please to pay on demand the act(z). 151.," and signed it with his own name, but it was not addressed to any one, and there were forged upon this instrument, when uttered, the words and signature, " Payable at Messrs. Masterman and Co., White Hart Court, William M'Inerheney;" and it appeared that M'Inerhenev kept cash at Masterman and Co.'s, who were bankers, the judges held this was not an order for payment of money, there being no special averments in the indictment that this was intended for an order, or that Masterman and Co. were bankers (a). Though we have seen, that to utter a foreign order on a banker with whom the person whose name is used has no cash, as a valid draft, is felony (b). constitute an order it must not merely be imperative in its terms, but it must be counterfeited in the name of one who assumes to have the disposing power over the things to be transferred, and not of a son or servant, unless expressly averred to have the control over the property in question(c). But it is not necessary that the goods should be specified in the order, [ *777 ] *so that to forge a paper in the name of a silversmith, for the redelivery of plate from Goldsmiths' Hall, in the words "Please to deliver my work to the bearer," is felony (d). Nor is it requisite that the order should be such a one as a particular statute requires, for to counterfeit a paper in the name of a seaman, for the payment of prize money, by a seaman, which is invalid as not being framed according to the directions of 32 Geo. 3, c. 34, s. 2, is Neither is it necessary that the instrument should be such as is commonly termed a warrant or order for the payment of money, but it will suffice if that be in reality its effect, so that a bill of exchange may be laid in these terms, though to call it by its usual denomination seems more accurate(f). By the 48 Geo. 3, c. 75, a justice of the peace may order the

been cast on shore; and where a justice's order was forged, stating that a I. Enactdead body had been cast on shore in the parish of A., that I. S. had ments made oath before the justice that he had laid out 31. 5s. in the burying him, Forgery. and requiring the treasurer to pay him the sum, it was held that this was a Decisions warrant or order for the payment of money within the 7 Geo. 2, though the upon or aporder did not state that I. S. was a churchwarden, &c.(g). But forging a plicable to magistrate's order to pay money will not be felony if the act of parliament and 1 Will. under which alone the magistrate had power to make it, required it to be 4, c. 66. under hand and seal, and it is under hand only, and if it is addressed to an individual on whom the magistrate has no power to make such order by the act(h). Nor is it any offence under the statute 1 Will. 4, c. 66, to forge an indorsement upon a warrant or order for the payment of money; neither if a party write on the back of a bill of exchange "Received for R. A." and sign his own name to it, is he guilty of forging a receipt within the provisions of that statute(i). It is clear, however, that the statute is not confined to orders made in the course of commercial transactions (j). many of the former objections as to the sufficiency of the warrant or order for the delivery of goods or money securities, will now be obviated by the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10, which introduces the word "request(k)." With respect also to the warrant or order for the payment of money, it is to be observed, that the 3d section of that act uses the word "undertaking(1)." And it has been held that the forging of a paper by which What an the supposed writer promises to pay W. B. or order 100l. or such other Undertaksum not exceeding the same, as he may incur by reason of his becoming ing for Payment of one of the sureties to the sheriff of Y. for J. It. a sheriff's officer, is a Money. forging of an undertaking for the payment of money under the statute (m).

The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10, makes it felony to forge a What a receipt for money or goods; and where a servant employed by her mistress Receipt for to pay tradesman's bills received from her a bill of a tradesman named Sad- Money. ler, together with the money to pay that and other bills, and she brought the bill again to her mistress with the words "paid *Sadler" on it, the word [ *778 ] Sadler being written with a small s, and there being no initial of the christian name of the tradesman; and the mistress stated that she believed the words to be a receipt, and that no application was made for the money afterwards: it was held, that the words "paid Sadler" imported a receipt or acquittance for the money, and were not merely a memorandum by the servant of her having paid the bill(n). So, although there be no such person as that whose receipt it purports to be(o). And if a high constable issue his precept for the payment of a county rate amounting to 31. 5s. 9d., and having received the moncy write a receipt at the bottom of the paper "Received the above rate, J. P.," and after that the sum 3l. 5s. 9d. in the precept be fraudulently altered to 3l. 15s. 9d., this is a forgery of a receipt within the statute, and may be laid with intent to defraud any rated inhabitant (by name) of the parish on which the rate is imposed "and others;" and the indictment need not set out the receipt, but may describe it under the stat-

As the prior acts appeared only to extend to inland bills of exchange, 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. the 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, made the counterfeiting or uttering any foreign bill, promissory note, or order for payment of money, a single felony, and punished it with transportation for fourteen years, sect. 1; and by the same act, engraving, or by any device making plates for the fabrication of any of the above instruments, for the first offence is made a misdemeanor, punishable with imprisonment for any time not exceeding six mouths, fine, or whipping; and for the second offence transportation for fourteen years, was directed, The forgery of a Prussian treasury note for one dollar was held to The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 30, now be within this act(q). provides for forgeries and uttering in England of any instrument to represent foreign securities, and subjects the offender to the same punishment as if the money had been payable or had purported to be payable in England(r).

When the Instrument may be treated as a Bill or Note.

We have seen that when it is doubtful whether the instrument be a bill of exchange or a promissory note, it may in a civil action be declared upon as But that where the forged instrument was in these words, "Neweither(s). port, Nov. 20, A. D. 1821, Two months after date, pay Mr. B. Hodday, or order, 281. 15s. value received, John Jones, At Messrs. Spooner and Co. bankers, London," five out of seven of the judges held, that a conviction of forging a promissory note could not be supported, and a pardon was recommended(t).

When the forged instrument is in any respect out of the usual form, it may be necessary to examine the authorities respecting the general requisites and forms of bills, notes, and checks (u), and of indorsements (v) and acceptances(w), which we have already very fully considered.

Forged Engrav-

With respect to the 18th section of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, *relating to engraving on any plate of any bill or promissory note of any bankers, it may be proper to observe, that it was held, under the prior act 41 Geo. 3, c. 57, that where a company carries on the business of bankers, although incorporated for a totally different purpose, that it was no offence under that act to have a plate for making bills of exchange in the name of such corporate company, unless it were averred and proved that it was with reference to the banking concern(x). It has been held, however, that the 18th section of the statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, is not confined to bankers in England, but applies to plates of promissory notes of persons carrying on the business of bankers in the British Colonies, &c. as in the province of Upper Canada(y).

In cases where a party has obtained goods, money, or bills of exchange for I. Enactpromissory notes, upon producing and delivering a forged instrument, which ments is so defective as to protect him from a prosecution for forgery, the party Forgery. defrauded may nevertheless indict him under the statute 7 & S Geo. 4, c. Decisions 29, for obtaining the goods, money, or bills, by false pretences(x), or for upon or apconspiracy, if several persons were concerned.

The total absence(a) of or defect(b) in the proper stamp which ought to 4, c. 66. have been impressed on a bill or note, affords no defence to an indictment How to for forging or uttering a bill, note, or check'c); for the enactments only inproceed if tended that the instrument, when not properly stamped, shall not be receivindictment ed in evidence or be available for any civil purpose, and were not intended not sustain-to impede the criminal administration of justice(d). So the uttering a bill able. or note that has once been paid, and which has been re-issued without hav- Defect in ing a new stamp thereon, though such stamp ought to have been impressed, Stamp. is as much an offence as if the bill had never been paid, or as if it had had the additional stamp(e).

plicable to 11 Geo. 4

The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, describes several distinct offences, What a viz. the "forging or altering," or the "offering, uttering, disposing of, or Forging or putting off, knowing the same to be forged or altered." The forging or alwithin Act. tering, with an intent to defraud, is of itself an offence, although the forged instrument has never been uttered (f).

With respect to what is a forging or altering within the meaning of this and the former acts, the term forgery has been defined to be making a false instrument with intent to deceive(g). It may be committed either by entirely false making, or by altering or adding to what has a genuine signature, or by subscribing or writing a false signature (h), or by misapplying a genuine signature, as by writing over it a bill or note for which it never was intended, so as to give it the appearance of the signature to such bill or note, and which is clearly a forgery (i), *and the misapplying a genuine signature so as to give it the appearance of a true acceptance or indorsement of the instru- [ *780] ment, as filled up, is also a forgery of the same (j). So if a person having the blank acceptance of another be authorised to write on it a bill of exchange for a certain limited amount, and he write on it a bill of exchange for a larger amount, with intent to defraud either the acceptor or any other person, this is forgery (k). The ordinary instances of forgery are the signing, without authority, the name of another person as drawer, acceptor, or indorser of a bill, or maker or indorser of a promissory note, or as the drawer of a check on his banker. And if A. put the name of B. on a bill of exchange as acceptor, without B.'s authority, expecting to be able to meet it when due or expecting that B. will overlook it, this is forgery: but if A. either had authority from B., or from the course of their dealings bona fide considered that he had such authority, it is not forgery (1). And the fact that on three or four previous occasions when he had drawn bills in that way, the party whose name was used had paid even without remark or remonstrance, would afford fair ground for the belief that he had such authority (m). If a man assume to be another person of the same name, and in such assumed character indorse a bill, note, or check intended to be payable to such other per-Forging or son, it is forgery, and the circumstance of the prisoner's being of the same Altering within Act. name is immaterial(n); and a signature will be false, and amount to forgery, though in a man's own name, if he attach to it or adopt a description or addition of any other real person of the same name(o). But the drawer of a bill of exchange who signs only his christian names, as if he subscribe himself "Thomas Wilson," when his real name is "Thomas Wilson Richardson," is not to be deemed to have committed a forgery, unless it be proved that the omission of his surname was for purposes of fraud (p). a person falsely represents himself to be the indorser of a bill, and writes nothing falsely himself, his offence is not forgery, if there be such a person who really indorsed the bill, and the offence, at most, will then be obtaining money or goods by a false pretence (q). So as to any other genuine signature upon a bill or note, though it may be intended to be passed as for the signature of another person, and be passed and taken accordingly, yet if there be nothing upon the bill or note to apply it to that person, it is not a forgery(r).

Not necessary that whole Instrument should be fictitions.

It is not requisite that the whole instrument-should be fictitious. Making a fraudulent insertion, alteration, or erasure, in any material part of a true document, by which another may be defrauded, the fraudulent application of a false signature to a true instrument, or a real signature to a false one, and the alteration of the date of a bill of exchange after acceptance, by which its payment may be accelerated *or postponed, are forgeries. So a fraudulent alteration even of a letter in any material part of a true in strument, whereby a new operation is given to it, will amount to forgery; and this though it be afterwards executed by another person ignorant of the Altering a bill from a lower to a higher sum is forging it, and it was held, that a person might be indicted on the 7 Geo. 2, c. 22, for forging such an instrument, though the statute has the word alter as well as forge; and in the same case it was held no ground of defence that before the alteration it has been paid by the drawer and re-issued (u). indictment stated that a bill was drawn for 81., and that persons unknown feloniously did alter it, by falsely forging and adding a cipher to the 8l. and a y to the eight, and that the prisoner had in his possession the said false, forged, altered, and counterfeited bill, and that he feloniously did utter as a true I. Enactbill the said false, forged, altered, and counterfeited bill, with intent, &c.; ments and it was moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the forgery was Forgery. stated to be by persons unknown, and the statement should have been that Decisions they feloniously forged, not that they feloniously altered (the statute 2 Geo. upon or 2, making it capital to forge, but saying nothing as to altering), it was an-applicable swered, that altering was forgery, and the judges were unanimous that the 4 and 1 conviction was right(x). So, altering a banker's one pound note, by sub-Will 4, c. stituting the word "ten" for the word "one(y)," or altering a bill of ex- 66. change from a bill at "three" months to a bill at "twelve" months(z), is a Not forgery. And where a note was originally made payable at a country bank-necessary er's or at their banker's in London, the substituting a new place for one of Instrument the places named, by introducing a piece of paper over the names of the should be London bankers, containing the names of another banking-house in London, fictitious. if with intent to defraud, is forgery (a). So a person who makes a copy of a receipt, interpolating the words "in full of all demands," and produces such false copy upon a suggestion of the loss of the original, is guilty of forgery (b). And where the prisoner procured a deed to be forged from J. M. and his son, conveying an estate for life to Mary K., and after the death of one of the supposed grantors he procured the false deed to be altered, by enlarging the grantee's estate to a fee, he was convicted of forging and uttering it in the state in which it was so altered, and it was held he was rightly so convicted, for it was no less a forgery after than before such alteration(c). So, expunging or discharging an indorsement on or even in the face of a bank note, with a liquor unknown, has been holden to be an erasure or razing an indorsement within 8 & 9 Will. *3, s. 20(d). So discharging a spe- [ *782] cial indorsement to A. B. and inserting instead another general indorsement, is an uttering and forging an indorsement(e). We have already seen what is a material alteration in a bill, or note, or acceptance (f).

We have seen that in some cases the signature of a fictitious name will Assuming amount to a forgery (g). The signature of a fictitious name or firm(h) will and signing in a ficticonstitute a forgery if done with a view to fraud(i); as where the prisoner tious Lockett was convicted of uttering a forged order for the payment of money, Name. signed " $R_t$ . fully convicted of forging such indorsement; for although it was proved that the fictitious signature was not necessary for his obtaining the money, and his intent in writing a false name was probably only to conceal the hands through which the bill had passed, yet it was a fraud as well on the owner of the bill as on the person who discounted it, as the one lost the chance of in a Ficti- tracing his property, and the other lost the benefit of a real indorser, if by accident the prior indorser should have failed (l). So where Francis was convicted of forging an order for the payment of money, signed "Jas. Cooke, jun.," and it appeared that on the 15th May he had taken lodgings under the name of Cooke, and on the 9th September following he wrote the forged draft, the judges held the conviction correct; for if the name was assumed for the purpose of fraud and of avoiding detection, it was as much a forgery as if the name assumed were that of any other person of known credit, though the case would have been different if the party had habitually used and become known by another name than his own(m). Where proof has been given of the prisoner's real name, it is incumbent on him to shew that he had before assumed the false name on other occasions, and for other excusable Making a mark, and suffering the assumed name to be written purposes(n). against the mark, is forging the name(o); and it makes no difference though it be proved that the bill or note would have been equally taken had the party used his own name (p). On an indictment for forging a check purporting to be drawn by G. A. upon Messrs. I. L. and Co., proof that no person named G. A. kept an account with or had any right to draw on I. L. and Co., is prima facie evidence that G. A. is a fictitious person(q).

Assuming a false Description or Addition, but using his proper Name.

The adopting a false description or addition, where a false name *was not assumed, and where there was no person answering the description of the addition, has been holden by a majority of the judges not to the forgery(r). So where the name of a firm of no credit had been before used by persons in the same street, where another firm of high credit resided, it was held no forgery to pass a bill accepted in the name of such first-mentioned firm, [ *783 ] though the prisoner represented it was the acceptance of the latter firm, and obtained credit accordingly(s); and we have seen, that the assuming even a

In this case a bill was addressed to Williams and Co. bankers, Birchin Lane, London, and there might at that time have been a 3 on the lower left hand corner of the bill. The prisoner was asked at the time whether the acceptors were Williams, Burgess, and Co., and his answers imported that they were Williams, Burgess, and Co., living at 20, Birchin Lane, and it was not their acceptance, and there were no known bankers in London using the style of Williams and Co. but them; but at No. 3, Birchin Lane, the name of "Williams and Co." was on the door, and some bills addressed to Messrs. Williams and Co. bankers, Swansea, had been accepted, payable at No. 3. and had been paid there. There

But this must be understood upon or apwith some qualification; for where the prisoner, whose real name was plicable to Thomas Brown, but he was not nor had been in the army or navy, signed and I Will. a promissory note "Thomas Brown," and uttered the note as a note of 4, c. 66. Captain Brown, a fictitious person, the judges held the conviction of forgery right, and that the circumstance of the forged name being the same as his own made no difference (u). And in a late case it was held to be forgery if a party in accepting a bill of exchange add to his own name the words "and Co.," so as to represent a fictitious or non-existing firm; for if an acceptance represent a fictitious firm, it is the same as if it represent a fictitious person(x).

What an Uttering—The statute requires that the instrument should be ei- What a fether forged or uttered, or "offered, uttered, disposed of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered." Upon the former acts it was decided that the instrument forged should be parted with, or tendered or offered, or used in some way to get money or credit upon it(y). Delivering a box, containing, among other things, forged stamps, to the party's own servant, to be forwarded by a carrier to a customer in the country, is an uttering (z). merely shewing a man an instrument, the uttering of which would be criminal, though with an intent of raising a false idea in him of the party's substance, is not an uttering *or publishing within 13 Geo. 3, c. 79; nor will [ •784] the leaving it afterwards, sealed up, with the person to whom it was shewn, under cover, that he may take charge of it, as being too valuable to be carried about, be an uttering or publishing (a). So if an engraving of a forged note be given to a party as a pattern or specimen of skill, the party giving it not intending that the particular note should be put in circulation, this is not an uttering within the I1 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66(b). And it has been held not to be sufficient to make a person a principal in uttering a forged note, that he came with the utterer to the town where it was uttered, went out with him from the inn at which they had put up a little before he uttered it, joined him again in the street a short time after the uttering, and at some little distance from the place of uttering, and ran away when the utterer was apprehended(c). If, however, a person presents a bill of exchange for payment, with a forged indorsement upon it of a receipt by the payee, and the clerk to whom he presents it objects to a variance between the spelling of the payee's name in the bill and the indorsement, upon which the person alters the indorsement into a receipt by himself for the drawer, it seems that the act of presenting the bill to the clerk, previous to his objection, is sufficient to constitute the offence of uttering the forged indorsement (d). And the offence of disposing and putting away forged bank notes, under 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, was holden complete, though the person to whom they were disposed of was an agent for the bank to detect utterers, and applied to the upon or ap- prisoner to purchase forged notes, and had them delivered to him as forged plicable to notes for the purpose of disposing of them; for if the prisoners put them off 11 Geo. 4 with intent to defraud, the intent was the essence of the crime, although and 1 Will. from circumstances which the prisoner was not aware of, the prosecutor could not have been defrauded by this act(e). And under the 15 Geo. 2, c. lonious Ut- 13, s. 11, it was held, that if a person knowingly delivered a forged instrument sering, &c. to another, who knowingly uttered it accordingly, the person who delivered such instrument to be put off might be convicted of having disposed of and put away the same (f). It has been suggested, that to constitute an uttering, it probably would not be deemed necessary that the instrument should be uttered in payment, and that uttering under the false pretence that it had been given in change by the person to whom it is uttered, in order to obtain from him a good note in lieu thereof, would probably be deemed an uttering, it having been so held in the case of counterfeit coin(g). A conditional uttering of a forged instrument is as much a crime as any other uttering; and where a person gave a forged acceptance, knowing it to be so, to the manager of a banking company where he kept an account, saying that he hoped this bill would satisfy the bank as a security for the debt he owed, and the manager replied that would depend on the result of inquiries respecting the acceptors, this was held a sufficient uttering (h). The mere fact of uttering a counterfeit note as a genuine note, is tantamount to a representation that it is genuine(i). Upon [ •785 ] an indictment for uttering a forged note, evidence is admissible *of the prisoner having at a prior time uttered another forged note of the same manufacture, and also that other notes of the same sabrication had been found on the files of the bank, with the prisoner's hand-writing on the back of them, in order to shew the prisoner's knowledge of the note mentioned in the indictment being a forgery (k). And it seems, that on an indictment for uttering a bill, knowing the acceptance to be forged, other forged bills, precisely similar, passed to the prosecutor by the prisoner, may be given in evidence to shew a guilty knowledge in the prisoner, though they were not passed till

(n) Reg. r. Cooke, 8 Car. & P. 586. See Millard's case, Russ & Ry. 245; post, 797, is sufficient, so if the instrument be uttered by the prisoner(o). But it was I. Enactheld that the mere having counterfeit silver in possession, with intent to ut-ments ter it as good, was not any offence under the act, because there was no crim-against Forgery inal act done (p). However, the procuring base coin with intent to utter it as good, is misdemeanor (q).

The very essence of forgery is an intent to defraud, and therefore the mere With what imitation of another's writing, the assumption of a name, or the alteration of a Intent the written instrument, where no person can be injured, does not come within must have the definition of the offence. Most of the former statutes, and the present been comact, expressly make an intent to defraud a necessary ingredient in the crime; mitted(r). and whether it existed or not is a question for the jury to determine. it is in no case necessary that any actual injury should result from the offence(s). The jury ought to infer an intent to defraud the person who would have to pay the instrument if it were genuine, although from the manner of executing the forgery, or from that person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose on him(t); and although the object was general to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument if genuine, did not enter into the prisoner's contemplation (u). And if on the trial of an indictment for uttering a forged bill of exchange, the jury are satisfied that the prisoner uttered the bill as a genuine bill, meaning it to be taken as such, and at that time knew it to be forged, they ought to find, as a necessary consequence of law, that the prisoner intended to defraud and may infer that the prisoner intended to defraud either the person to whom he paid the bill, or the person whose name was forged, as every thing which is the natural and inevitable consequence *of the act must be taken to be the intention of the [ *786] Uttering a forged stock receipt to a person who employed the prisoner to buy stock to that amount, and advanced the money, is sufficient evidence of an intent to defraud that person; and the oath of the person to whom the receipt was uttered, that he believes the prisoner had no such intent, will not repel the presumption of an intent to defraud(y). And where a forged bill of exchange, payable to the order of the defendant, was given as a pledge only, but to obtain credit, it was holden to be fraudulent within the meaning of the then statute(z). So the fact that the prisoner has given guarantees to his bankers, to whom he paid a forged note to a larger amount than the note, does not so completely negative an intent to defraud them as to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury (a).

All the statutes respecting forgery make the aiders and procurers equally Accessoguilty with the principal offender. The 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, ss. rice, &c. how pan-3 and 25, are express upon this point(b); and the rule that when a statute ishable. creates a felony it includes accessories before and after, as at common law, seems to apply to this as to other offences. It was held under the former acts, that procuring a person to forge a bill or note was a capital offence, but that procuring to alter was only a common law offence(c). But it was held, that where the procurers are not present at the forging or the uttering, they must be indicted specifically as accessories, and not as principals (d). If several combine to forge an instrument, and each executes by himself a distinct part of the forgery, and they are not together when the instrument is completed, they are all nevertheless guilty as principals(e). But where three persons were jointly indicted for feloniously using plates containing impressions of forged notes, it was held that the jury must select one particular time after all three had become connected; and must be satisfied, in order to convict them, that at such time they were all either present together at one act of using, or assisted in such one act, as by two using and one watching at the door to prevent the others being disturbed, or the like; and that it was not sufficient to shew that the parties were general dealers in forged notes, and that at different times they had singly used the plates, and were individually in possession of forged notes taken from them f). So where several planned the uttering of a forged order for payment of money, and it was uttered accordingly by one in the absence of others, it was held that the actual utterer was alone the principal(g); and that persons privy to the uttering of a forged note by previous concert with the utterer, but who were not present at the uttering, or so near as to be able to afford any aid or assistance, were not principals, but accessories before the fact(h). And where the prisoners J. E. and S. E were indicted for uttering a bad shilling to M. B., and having another bad shilling in their possession at the time and the uttering was by the woman alone, in the absence of the man, it was held that the man was not liable to be convicted of the actual *uttering, although proved to be the associate of the woman on the day of the uttering, and to have had other bad money for the purpose of uttering; it was also held that the woman could not be convicted of the second offence of having other bad money in her possession at the time, on the evidence of her associating with a man not present at the uttering, but having large quantities of bad money about him for the purpose of uttering (i). Where the wife, by her husband's order and procuration, but in his absence, knowingly uttered a forged order and cerufcate for the payment of prize money, it was held that the presumption of coercion at the time of uttering did not arise as the husband was absent, and that the wife was properly convicted of the uttering, and the husband of procuring(k).

Where the prisoner being indicted in the county of Wilts for having a Venue. forged note in his possession, it appeared that whilst he was in London his lodgings in Wiltshire were searched in the presence of his wife, and in a pocket-book (in which his name had been written by himself) the note in question was found, bearing date two months before, at which time he was in another county; it was considered by a majority of the judges, that this was not sufficient evidence of the commission of the offence within the coun-But on an indictment for uttering forged stamps, where there was a delivery of a box containing the stamps to the party's own servant, that he might carry them to an inn to be forwarded by a carrier to a customer in the country, and the delivery was in one country, and the inn to which the servant was to carry them in another; it was held that the party might be indicted in the former county (n). And the present act, 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 24, contains an express provision for indicting the party in the county where he is apprehended or shall be in custody(o). And if under this act a prisoner be tried for forgery in the county where he is in custody, the forgery may be alleged to have been committed in that county, and there need not be any averment that the prisoner is in custody there (p).

The instrument forged must be correctly stated by name to have been Statement one of the instruments named in the statute, section 3(r); and as therein de- of the Inscribed(s), viz. as "a note," (or "a bill of exchange,") of the Governor arrument and Company of the Bank of England, commonly called "a bank note," (q). or "a bank bill of exchange," or "a bank post bill," or that it was "a bill of exchange," or "a promissory note for the payment of money," or "a warrant and order for the payment of money," or "a certain acceptance of the said bill of exchange," or "an indorsement on the said bill of exchange, &c." (which has been previously stated in the indictment). And the instrument to be produced on the trial must in legal operation constitute a bill of exchange, &c., as stated in the indictment, or the variance will be fatal; for instance, if a bill be described as a promissory note, the defendant will be acquitted, and vice  $vers\hat{a}(t)$ ; and a bank post bill cannot be described as a bill of exchange, but it may be described as a bank bill of exchange (u). And before the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3(x), where the forged instrument was actually within the meaning of the statute, but did not sufficiently appear to be so on the face of it, not only a literal copy of it must have been set forth, but averments must have been made of all extrinsic facts necessary to make it appear upon the face of the record that the forged instrument was one of those intended by and described in the statute (y). Therefore when by the usage of a public office the bare signature of a party upon a navy bill operated as a receipt, an indictment for forging such a receipt, setting forth the

for Forgery.

Statement of the Instrument.

II. Of the navy bill and indorsement, and charging the defendant with having forged "a Indictment certain receipt for money, to wit, the sum of 251. mentioned and contained in the said paper, called a navy bill, which forged receipt was as follows, that is to say, 'William Thornton, William Hunter," was holden bad, because it did not shew by proper averment that those signatures imported a So it was holden, that an indictment for forging the word "settled" at the bottom of a bill must shew by proper averments that it was meant for a receipt(a). Again, it was held, that an indictment for forging or uttering a receipt in the handwriting of H. H., as thus, "Received H. H." was bad, because there was nothing to shew what H. H. meant, or that he was a person to whom the money ought properly to have been paid(b). So where the defendant drew a bill, "Please to pay the bearer, on demand, fifteen pounds on account of your humble servt C. H. Ravenscroft," which was his name; and when the instrument was uttered, there was forged upon it "payable at M. & Co. Wm. Mc Inerheney," and it appeared that W. Me Inerheney kept cash at M. and Co.'s, who were bankers, it was held that this was not an order for the payment of money on the face of it, it not being addressed to any person, and that there being no special averment that it was intended for an order, or that M. & Co. were bankers, the prisoner could not on such an indictment be convicted(c). Although if the false signature contained an initial only for the christian name, it was not necessary to aver what christian name was meant(d); nor would a mere superfluous bond and writing obligatory, though the statute mentioned both in the dis-

It was also necessary, before the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3(f), to set forth a copy of the forged instrument, and to state that it was in these words (then setting out a copy) in order that the court might be able to judge from the record whether it were a document in respect of which forgery could be committed (g). The instrument was usually stated thus, "which said forged bill of exchange is as follows, that is to say, &c." (setting it forth(h)); but it might be stated "is to the tenor following," or "is in the words and figures following," or it might be "a certain forged paper-writing, purporting to be a bill of exchange(i)." But the words "purport" and "purport ing" import what appears on the face of the instrument(k). The adoption of that term was therefore sometimes dangerous; it was never necessary to state both the purport and the tenor, that is to say, that the instrument purported to be drawn so and so, and was of the tenor following; and if in this superfluity of statement a repugnance arose, the indictment was bad. King, the indictment was ry Averholden bad, on the ground that the name of one person or thing cannot pur-ments. port to be another, and that the forged bill did not, as alleged in the indictment, purport to be directed to John King(l). On the same principle,, an indictment for forging a bill of exchange directed to Ransom, Moreland and Hammersly, stating that it purported to be directed to George Lord Kinnaird, William Moreland, and Thomas Hammersley, by the name and description of Ransom, Morland, and Hammersley, was holden bad, because the tenor and purport as alleged were repugnant, and the purport signifies that alone which appears on the face of the instrument, and that therefore this averment was untrue(m). Though an allegation that a forged order for the payment of money was drawn on "Messrs. Drummond and Co. Charing Cross," by the name of "Mr. Drummond, Charing Cross," was held good(n). The safe way therefore to avoid all these difficulties, was to state that the defendant forged a bill of exchange, &c. and which was as follows, setting it forth.

The instrument must also have been set forth in words and figures, and How Innot merely according to the substance(o); and though in general figures strument to ought not to be used in an indictment, yet it was so necessary to set forth a forth. fac-simile of the instrument forged, that that rule did *not apply to indict- [ *790] ments for forgery(p); and if by addition, omission, or alteration, a word was so changed as to become another word, the variance was fatal(q). A mere literal variance, however, would not vitiate, as "value received" instead of "value reicevd," in the forged instrument itself (r). So Messis Masterman & Co." for Mes, Masterman & Co."(s) and "Jawick Park" for "Jawick," was no variance(t). And it seems not to have been necessary to set out in the indictment every part of a written document connected with the matter forged or referred to therein; and therefore, where upon an indictment for forging a receipt, it appeared that the receipt was written at the foot of an account, and the indictment merely set out the receipt thus "Sth March, 1773; Received the contents above, by me Stephen Withers," without setting out the account at the foot of which it was written, it was holden sufficient(u). So on the other hand, the mis-statement of surplusage might be rejected; and therefore where the indictment in setting out the forged instrument, also set out the attestation at the foot of it, as part of the instrument, but it appeared in evidence, that when the defendant subscribed the instrument, the attestation was not written on it, it was held to be no va-

II. Of the riance (x), and it was held, that the circumstance of the attestation of a wit-Indictment ness, and the words "Mary Wallis, her mark," being inserted as part of the tenor of the note forged, when in reality they were added immediately after the prisoner's signature, would not amount to a variance (y). er case where the prisoner was indicted for forging a navy bill, and at the bottom of the bill were printed certain words, "pay, &c. out of navy fund," &c. so as to be ready for acceptance at the navy office, Lord Ellenborough ruled, that it was not necessary to notice those words in the indictment, because until acceptance they were a nullity and inoperative; and he also ruled, that matter written after the bill was uttered should not be stated(2).

To obviate the difficulties so frequently arising from a mistake in setting forth the instrument, and to prevent a failure of justice from mere clerical or verbal inaccuracies, the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3, enacts, that it shall not be necessary in any indictment for forgery to set forth a copy or facsimile of the instrument forged, but that it shall be sufficient to describe the instrument in such manner as would sustain an indictment for stealing the It is now, therefore, sufficient in an indictment for forgery to charge that the prisoner "did forge a certain promissory note for the pay-[ *791 ] ment of 50l.(b)" without *stating the date(c). Nor is the act confined to such instruments only as are strictly the subject of larceny, but extends equally to receipts (d). The act, however, does not extend to foreign instruments (e). And, therefore, in an indictment for forging an instrument in a foreign language, as a Prussian treasury note, a translation of the note must still be set forth, so that the verdict of guilty may include a finding as well of the sense and meaning of the instrument, as of the fact of forging the original, and for the omission the judgment will be arrested (f). And where foreign notes were set out in the indictment in the original language, but the translation omitted some words which were in a margin or border round the body of the note, and denoted the year in which the notes were issued, and it appeared that without these words the notes would not be capable of being circulated in the country to which they belonged; it was held, that the translation was imperfect, and the special counts setting out the notes consequently bad(g). It also seems that sewing to the parchment on which an indictment is written impressions of forged notes taken from engraved plates, is not a legal mode of setting out the notes in the indictment(h). In case of a forged signature, II. Of the it must not be averred that he whose signature it was intended to resemble Indictment signed it, for that would be inconsistent with the charge of forgery (i).

The criminal act of the prisoner should be described in the terms of the Criminal statute on which the prosecution is founded. Since the 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, the technical description should be, that the defendant felo-bow stated. niously "did forge," or that he feloniously "did alter," or that he feloniously "did offer," or "utter," or "dispose of," or "put off," knowing the same to be forged (or altered) a certain, &c. This act does not, as the former repealed acts, contain the words "falsely make," or "counterfeit," or "cause or procure to be falsely made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly act or assist in the false making, forging, or counterfeiting," nor the words "publish as true;" and therefore in an indictment for an offence committed since the 20th July, 1830, neither of those terms should in general be introduced; though their introduction will not vitiate(k). The word "forged," alone seems sufficient, whether the defendant is indicted for forging the whole false instrument, or for only altering a part of a genuine instrument; and in all indictments for the alteration of a written instrument (and which alteration in a material part, we have seen, amounts as much to forgery as the false making of an entire instrument(l)), and where the act did not provide for altering, it was held that the offence should be charged as a forging in the words which the legislature had employed (m); but where the statute like the present act provided for altering as well as forging, it was considered advisable in one count *to describe the offence as a felonious altering, where only a part of [ *742] an instrument, otherwise genuine, had been altered(n), though an indictment for forging the whole would suffice (o); and the offence of discharging one indorsement and inserting another may be described as altering an indorse-An indictment on 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, which charged the prisoner with having feloniously altered a bill of exchange by falsely making, forging, and adding a cypher "O" to the letter and figure £8 in the bill, and also falsely making, forging, and adding the letter "y", to the word "eight" whereby the letter and figure £8 in the same bill became £80, and the word "eight," before written eight in the said bill became eighty, by reason and means of which said forgeries and additions the said bill of exchange, so drawn as aforesaid for eight pounds, became and purported to be a bill of exchange for eighty pounds, was held good, though the words of the statute are, "if any person shall falsely make, forge, and counterfeit," because the second count charged, that certain persons unknown altered the bill, and the defendant feloniously uttered and published it as true, knowing it to be forged. which was clearly within the statute (q). But the first count was at least informal.

Where the forging is of a mere addition to the instrument, and which does not alter the legal effect of it, but is merely collateral to it, as, for instance, a forged acceptance or indorsement to a genuine bill of exchange, proof of the forgery of the addition will not support an indictment charging the forgery of the entire instrument, and the forgery of such addition must be spe-

II. Of the cially alleged and proved as laid(r). In these cases the indictment should Indictment commence by stating the defendant's possession of the genuine instrument, setting it out verbatim, and then state the forgery only of the acceptance or indorsement, setting it out(s). However, forgery of the signature of a Act of For- drawer of a bill or maker of a note may be stated as the forgery of the whole bill or note, although the body of the bill or note were genuine, or written by the prosecutor, because the signature in that case gives effect to the whole (t).

Where a count is inserted for feloniously altering an instrument, it first states the defendant's possession of the genuine instrument, setting it out verbatim, and then states that the defendant feloniously did alter the same by then and there falsely obliterating and defacing, &c. setting forth all the alterations verbatim et literatim, and then stating what was the consequent appearance of the instrument in its altered form, and then setting out, in words and letters, a copy of the altered instrument, and concluding with intent to defraud(u).

It is always prudent, for fear that the prisoner's own false making or altering may not be proved, to insert a count charging that the defendant feloniously did "offer," or "utter," "dispose of," and "put off," the forged or altered instrument previously set forth in the indictment, knowing the same to have been and to be so forged or altered (x), and if the defendant merely atempted to put off the instrument, then only the word "offer" should be insert-The observations, however, *just made with respect to the forging of a mere addition to the instrument, apply also to the case of uttering; and, therefore, a count charging a prisoner with uttering a forged bill with intent to defraud A. B., and setting out the bill and the acceptance upon it, is not supported by proving that the prisoner uttered the bill, and that the acceptance on it was a forgery (z). So a count stating that the prisoner had a bill in his possession (which was set out) with a forged acceptance on it (which was also set out), and that he, knowing the acceptance to be forged, uttered the bill with intent to defraud A. B., is bad(a).

It was held, that in an indictment upon the 45 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 1, for putting away and disposing of a forged bank note, it need not be stated to whom the note was disposed of, and that it was sufficient to allege that the prisoner disposed of the note with intent to defraud the bank, he knowing it at the time to be forged (b). It should seem from this case, and on principle, that it is necessary to aver, as usual, that the defendant, at the time of his uttering, knew that the instrument was forged, for subsequent knowledge would not render his act thus highly criminal.

for Forgery.

The very words of the statute 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 3, Statement make it of the essence of the offence that it was committed "with intent in of Intent any of the cases aforesaid to defraud any person whatsoever;" and the 28th to defraud section of the act declares the meaning of the word "person," and extends (f). it to corporations and partners, and to his majesty, or any foreign prince, and declares, that it shall suffice, in an indictment for forgery, "to name one person only of such company, society, or number of persons, and to allege the offence to have been committed with intent to defraud the person so named, and another or others, as the case may be." This enactment gets rid of difficulties that heretofore arose(g). It was held, that in an indictment on 41 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 2, for having in possession a plate for making bills of exchange in the name of a company of bankers, it should be stated that the company carried on the business of bankers(h).

The Bank Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 9, is not imperative on joint stock banks to prosecute in the name of their public officer; and, therefore, an indictment for forgery, with intent to defraud a joint stock bank, may lay the intent to be to defraud "A. B. [one of the shareholders] and others(i)." And if the intent be laid to defraud the public officer of a joint stock bank, it is not necessary to aver that he was "" nominated" under that statute(k). [ *794] It should seem, however, that a prisoner who is a shareholder in a joint stock bank, and who knowingly utters a forged acceptance to that bank, cannot be convicted on counts laying an intent to defraud "R. B." (another of the shareholders) "and others(l)." It is not necessary to set forth the manner in which the party was to have been defrauded(m); nor need it appear that the party to be defrauded was a party to the bill, or that the bill was uttered or tendered to him, for that is matter of evidence (n). this act it was held, that certainty to a common intent was sufficient in this part of the indictment; and therefore an indictment stating the intention to have been to defraud "Messrs. Drummond and Co." without naming the parties in the firm, was considered sufficient; and it was even said, that when the forgery was upon "Mr. Drummond, Charing Cross," it would be good to lay the intent to injure him though several persons must have been intend-

The words "with intent," in an indictment for forgery, apply to the verb to which the prisoner's name is the nominative; therefore a count which states that the prisoner "did forge" a promissory note for 501., "on which said promissory note is an indorsement as follows, 'C. J.,' with intent to defraud W. R. S." sufficiently charges that the forged note, and not the indorsement, was the thing by which the prisoner intended to defraud W. R. S.(p).

II. Of the for Forgery. Conclusion.

The indictment must conclude against the form of the statute, and this Indication was, formerly, essential in order to deprive the offender of his clergy (q). By the 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20, however, the insertion of the words "against the form of the statute," instead of the words "against the form of the statutes," is cured after verdict. The omission of the words "against the peace" is also cured by that statute. And it has been held, that a bad conclusion of contra pacem is as no contra pacem, and therefore cured(r). But the act is confined to objections taken after verdict, and an informal conclusion is, consequently, still open to demurrer(s).

Courts in which to presecute.

It has been held, that the sessions have no jurisdiction to try forgery, and that they cannot take cognizance of it as a cheat, though there seems to be no principle on which that exception and that of perjury at common law are founded(t).

III. Of the Evidence.

III. OF THE EVIDENCE.

Production of forged Instrument. Notice to produce.

What is or is not a false making of a bill of exchange or other instrument, is a question of law(u). In general, the forged instrument must be produced on the trial, and if the prisoner has possession of it, it is advisable to serve him with a notice to produce the same, and after proof of the service of such notice, if the defendant do not produce the instrument, parol [ *795] evidence of the contents may be given (v). But it *has been decided, that in an indictment for stealing or forging a note which it was proved the defendant swallowed or destroyed, no notice to produce need be given, and after proof of the defendant's destruction of the instrument, parol evidence of its contents is admissible (w). And it has been held, that if on an indictment for forgery being presented to the grand jury it appear that the forged instrument cannot be produced, either from its being in the hands of the prisoner or from any other sufficient cause, they may receive secondary evidence of its contents (x); and it was further held, that if upon presentment of an indictment for forgery to the grand jury, a witness decline to produce certain deeds before them, and they form part of his title to his own estate, he is not compellable to produce them, but that if they do not, the grand jury may compel their production (y).

Proof of Forgery. ty whose Name forged as a Witness.

In all cases of forgery it is essential to prove that the instrument forged is not the writing of the person in whose name it professes to have been cy of Par- made(z). In other offences, as we have seen, the party injured is generally a competent witness against the prisoner, and that there are many cases in which parties are admitted to give evidence who are to derive an immediate advantage from the conviction. The objection affected at most the credit,

And where the party was manifestly interested in the event, though called not to prove the hand-writing, but the fact of forgery by other means, his testimony was formerly rejected(c). By these decisions the testimony of the person best able to prove the falsity was excluded, and the course used to be to release the party, in order that he might become a witness'd). But now by the 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, ss. 1 and 2, it is declared, that in any indictment for forging or uttering, no person shall be deemed an incompetent witness in support of such prosecution by reason of any interest he may be supposed to have in respect of the instrument forged. And as the party whose hand-writing has been forged must necessarily be best able to disprove the hand-writing to be his, he ought in prudence in all cases to be called as a witness; but this is not absolutely necessary, for on an indictment for forg- Not absoing the indorsement of a payee described as a cheesemonger at Liverpool, it lutely necwas held not to be necessary to prove (by the drawer or maker) who was he should intended as the payee, and that it sufficed to prove by the supposed payee, be a Witwho was a cheesemonger at Liverpool, that he did not indorse, especially ness. as the prisoner had admitted guilt generally in the transaction (e). So on an indictment for forging a bank note it is not necessary that the signing clerk at the bank should be produced, and *it suffices if other witnesses, acquaint- [ *796] ed with his hand-writing, state that the signature to the note is not Li<sub>2</sub>(f).

Where the name forged is that of an existing person, evidence must be given to shew that the person mentioned in the indictment and in the bill or note are the same (g), and that the signature is not the hand-writing of that person, upon proof of which, although there be another person of the same name residing near, it will not be necessary to disprove his hand-writing (h). Since the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 2, has made the party whose name has been forged a competent witness to disprove his hand-writing, it might be supposed that he is the best witness to prove the forgery, and that he ought to be called; but it has been held that this is not legally necessary, and that the writing on the instrument may be disproved by any person acquainted with his hand-writing (i); though it must be obvious that the party whose hand-writing was forged must be better able to swear that he was party to no If it be necessary to prove the hand-writing of the prissuch transaction. oner to the false signature, it should be proved by a person who has seen him write at Last once, or who has corresponded with him(k); but not by mere

III. Of the comparison with other documents admitted or proved to be of the prisoner's hand-writing (l), when not already in evidence for other purposes.

Proof of Fogery.

In all cases the best possible evidence should be adduced; for otherwise, although the evidence might be legally sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty, yet the jury, who are frequently anxious to acquit, will do so; and therefore where a bill was accepted in the name of "Samuel Knight, Market Place, Birmingham," though the judge, after conferring with the other judges present, held, on an indictment for the forgery of this acceptance, that the result of inquiries made at Birmingham by the prosecutor, who was not acquainted with the place, was evidence for the jury, though neither the best nor the usual evidence given, to prove the non-existence of the pretended acceptor, yet the jury acquitted the prisoner (m).

When the prisoner is indicted for forgery by subscribing a fictitious name assumed by him, some evidence must be given by the prosecutor that it is not the prisoner's real name (n). But upon an indictment for forging a check drawn on the name of G. Andrews upon Messrs. Jones, Lloyd, and Co., it was held, that proof that no person named G. Andrews kept an account with or had any right to draw on such bankers, was print facie evidence that G. Andrews was a fictitious name(o), that the prisoner's name is different, and that prima facic he has assumed for the first time or continued the false name for the purposes of deception or fraud in that particular transaction in making undue use of the instrument'p); though it is said, that after proving that he assumed a fictitious name in the transaction and what his real [ *797] name is, it is incumbent on him to shew that he did not in that *instance sign the false name for the purpose of fraud (q). And where on an indictment for uttering a forged check in the name of J. W. on Messrs. C. G. and Co., who were army agents and bankers, it was proved by a clerk in the former department that he did not know of any customer named J. W., and that he had been told by the other clerks that there was not any such customer in the banking department, it was held, that this was sufficient proof on the part of the prosecution to call upon the prisoner to shew that there was in fact such a person as J. W. having an account with Messrs. C. G. and Co., and in the absence of such proof was sufficient by itself for the consideration of Where a prisoner in custody on a charge of forgery wrote to a friend "to ask Mr. G. or some other solicitor, whether the punishment was the same whether the names forged were those of real or of fictitious persons," and Mr. G. was not his attorney, it was held that this was not a privileged communication(s).

Proof of Uttering. Evidence Uttering admissible.

In support of an indictment for uttering forged notes, evidence that the prisoner has previously uttered other forged notes may be given for the purof previous pose of shewing his knowledge of the forgery (t); but such notes must be produced and proved to have been forgeries(u); or if the prisoner had such other notes in his possession, that fact must be proved, and also the service upon him of a notice to produce the same, after which parol evidence of the contents will be admissible in evidence (x). If the defendant has destroyed

In a case of forging and uttering a forged bill, a letter written by the Evidence. prisoner to a third person, saying that that person's name is on another bill, Evidence and desiring him not to say that that bill is a forgery, is receivable in evidence of previous to shew guilty knowledge; but the jury ought not to consider it as evidence that that other bill is forged, unless such bill is produced, and the forgery of it proved in the usual way(z). So proof of bills on the same house with a bill in question, importing to have been drawn by persons not known at that house will be deemed ejusdem generis with the bill in question(a). proof that the prisoner had pointed out where bills or notes ejusdem generis were hidden, is inadmissible, because until explained it raises a presumption that he had them in his possession, and had hidden them(b). So proof that the defendant had previously uttered other bills or notes ejusdem generis, is also admissible(c); and it has even been supposed, that the prisoner's subse- When subquently uttering other forged bills knowing them to have been forged, may sequent Utbe evidence of his prior criminality (d). But it has been decided, that if a tering adsubsequent uttering has been made the subject of a distinct indictment, then it cannot be given in evidence to shew a guilty knowledge in a former utter-And it should seem, that only proof of previous acts should be admitted in evidence in a criminal case, to shew quo animo the prior act was done, unless the subsequent act of uttering was in some way connected with the particular case before the *jury, so that it could be shewn that the [ *798] notes in each case were of the same manufacture (f). And it was in that view that Gaselee, J. was of opinion, that bills of exchange precisely similar to that passed to the prosecutor by the prisoner, might be given in evidence to shew a guilty knowledge in the prisoner, though they were not passed till about a month after the uttering in respect of which the prisoner was then under trial(g). In the cases just referred to, the bills or notes must be produced, and their being forgeries proved(h). Nor can evidence of what a prisoner has said respecting other bills be received unless such other bills are produced and proved(i). And proof that the prisoner took back such other bills or notes, and changed them with the word "forged" written upon them, is not of itself sufficient evidence of his guilt in any other transaction. ever, evidence may be given of the prisoner's conduct on other utterings, and that he passed by different names, as tending to shew a system of fraud(k). Proof that the defendant has uttered other forged bills or notes of a different kind, though formerly questioned, is now continually admitted, because though there may be considerable difference between the genuine bills of different houses, the forgeries upon many of them probably come from the same hand; and shewing that a man has uttered forged notes of different descriptions, raises a presumption that he is in the habit of procuring forged notes, and that he had the criminal knowledge imputed to him by the indictment(1). And on an indictment for uttering a forged bill of exchange, the judge will hear evidence of all the facts which form parts of one contin-

Proof of Intent(o).

With respect to the defendant's intent to defraud, the jury ought, in support of a count for forging the instrument with that intent, to infer his intention to defraud the person who would primarily have to pay the instrument if it were genuine, although from the inartificial manner of committing the forgery, or from that person's ordinary caution, it would not be likely to impose on him, and although the object was general to defraud whoever might take the instrument, and the intention of defrauding in particular the person who would have to pay the instrument if genuine, did not enter into the prisoner's contemplation (p). It is not necessary to prove that any party was actually defrauded by the forgery(q); and if from the whole circumstance the jury can presume that the defendant intended to defraud any party, and such party might have been defrauded if the forgery had succeeded, it is sufficient to convict him, although from circumstances of which he was not apprised he could not in fact defraud him(r); and this although the party to whom the forged instrument was uttered swore that he believed that the defendant did not intend to defraud him(s).

I. LARCENY OF BILLS, &c.

I. Larceny of Bille.

THE 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, repeals the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 3, and most of the prior acts relative to stealing or embezzling, or obtaining by false pretences, bills of exchange, promissory notes, and warrants and orders for the payment of money, with an exception of the statutes relating to the post office, or any branch of the public revenue, or to the naval, military, victualling, or public stores of his majesty, and any act relating to the Bank of England or South Sea Company. The 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 3, relates to stealing exchequer bills and bank notes.

The 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, consolidates and amends the law of larceny Enactments of 7 and other offences connected therewith, on and from the 1st July, 1827. & 8 Geo. The 5th section enacts, that if any person shall steal any bill, note, (not 4, c. 29, as mentioning exchequer bills or bank notes,) warrant, order, or other security to Larcony of Bills, whatsoever, for money, or for payment of money, whether of this kingdom Notes, and or of any foreign state, he shall be deemed guilty of felony, of the same na. CHAP. I Кrс. Enactments of of Bills. Checks.

I. Larceny the property of their masters, to transportation for any term not exceeding fourteen years nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned, &c.; and the 47th section enacts, that clerks and servants receiving any valuable security on their master's account and embezzling it, shall be deemed to have felo-7 & 8 Geo. niously stolen it, and be liable to the same punishment(b). Receivers of any 4, c. 29, as stolen or embezzled property are also particularly provided against(c). And to Larceny the 57th section enacts, that upon conviction of a felony or misdemeanor in Notes, and stealing, taking, obtaining, or converting, or in knowingly receiving any chaltel, money, or valuable security, or other property whatever, on a prosecution by or on the behalf of the owner or his executor, the prosecutor shall have restitution of the chattels, but it provides, that if it shall appear before any award of restitution or order made, that any valuable security (i. e. bill, note, or warrant, or order for payment of money,) shall have been bon i fide paid or discharged by some person or body corporate liable to the payment thereof; or being a negotiable instrument, shall have been bona fide taken or received by transfer or delivery by some person or body corporate for a just and valuable consideration, without any notice, or without any reasonable cause to suspect that the same had by any felony or misdemeanor been stolen, taken, obtained, or converted as therein mentioned, in such case the court shall not award or order the restitution of such security. This enactment is substituted for one in 21 Hen. 8, c. 21, but with some very material alterations, for it is extended to receivers, and to property obtained by false pretences and other misdemeanors, and the proviso is new.

The consideration of these provisions, and the other enactments relating to public securities, and the decisions applicable to them, would involve the examination of the whole law of larceny, embezzlement, and false pretences; but we will here only examine those peculiarities which affect bills, promissory notes, and checks, or orders for the payment of money.

The Instrument stolen.

With respect to the instrument stolen, it was held under the former acts (and which decisions are still applicable) that it must have been a valid instrument, or the party could not be indicted for stealing it (d). It should therefore seem, that if a bill or note be payable on a contingency, or not merely for the payment of money; the party stealing it will not be guilty of larceny(e).

So if the instrument be not impressed with the requisite stamp at the time it is obtained by the defendant, he is not indictable (f). Therefore where a draft on a banker, which ought to have been stamped, was taken from a letter by a person employed by the post office, it was holden that this was not such a security as to subject him to be indicted for larceny under the statute 7 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 1, or the 9 Ann, c. 10, s. 41, then in force(g) So a check on a banker, written on unstamped paper, payable to D. F. J., and not made payable to bearer, is not a valuable security within the 7 & 8 [ *801 ] Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 5, because, not *being payable to bearer, it does not fall within the exception in favour of checks so payable(h); and it has been held, I. Larcony that if a clerk, on receiving money on his master's account, give the debtor of Bills, a receipt on plain paper, when a stamp is necessary, such receipt is not evidence against the clerk on an indictment for embezzlement(i). But this strament doctrine, we have seen, does not apply to the crime of forgery(k). And stolen. an unstamped check is admissible for the purpose of identifying other property stolen in support of an indictment for the larceny of the latter (l).

(c) Sect. 54, 55, 56. Those sections avoid the objection taken under the prior act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 24, in Rex v. King, 2 Car. & P. 412, where it was held, that a receiver of stolen securities for money was not punishable as an accessory to a felony under such former act, which was so inaccurate that no conviction could take place upon it.

So on the general ground that the instrument stolen must have been at the time valid and available, the first indictment against Aslett failed, it appearing that the instruments termed in the indictment "exchequer bills," and apparently valid, were invalid as such, because the authority of the person who had signed them had previously ceased (m); and though the prisoner was afterwards convicted on another indictment for embezzling the same as " bank effects" under the 15 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 12, and although the majority of the judges thought that invalid exchequer bills were nevertheless such " bank effects," yet he was not executed (n). So it was holden no felony to steal "bankers' bills," which, though signed, and ready for circulation, had never been parted with, because no money could be considered as due upon them(o). But the circumstance of the payee not having indorsed a promissory note was holden not to constitute any objection to a conviction upon the act then in force(p). And where the notes of a country bank which had been paid, and therefore no longer valuable as notes, were sent into the country in return, in order to be re-issued (which they might be under the 44 Geo. 3, c. 98, and 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 14.) and were stolen during the journey, it was held, that although an indictment for stealing them as notes might not be sustainable, yet an indictment might be supported for stealing the stamps and paper, which were valuable as re-issuable by the owners (q).

Upon the then existing act, which mentioned bank notes in the plural number, it was held a felony to steal a single note(r); and that if a person employed by the post office on one day secrete a letter containing half a bank note, and another letter at a different time containing the other half of it, his offence will be complete(s); and afterwards the 42 Geo. 3, c. 81, expressly declared it a capital offence to secrete, embezzle, or destroy any letter containing a part of any instrument named in the former statute; and the same point has also since been decided upon an indictment against a servant for embezzling the halves of country bank notes coming by the post to his master(t). But it may be proper in these cases to frame the indictment specially, with counts describing the pieces as "pieces of paper partly written and partly printed, bearing stamps," and specifying their value(u). If a person, though not the servant of the party who intrusts him, receive a parcel *containing notes to take to a coach-office, and abstract the notes on [ *802] his way there, and apply them to his own use, he is guilty of larceny (v).

I. Larceny of Bills, & c.

The Instrament stolen.

The instrument stolen must have been the property of another person at the time it was taken, and also of value to him at that time, and therefore it was holden not to be the offence of larceny under the prior act 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, to compel, by duress, a man to write and sign a note on the paper and with the ink of the defendant (w). So since the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, where A. in consequence of seeing an advertisement applied to B. to raise money for him, and B. said he would procure him 5000l., and produced from his pocket-book ten blank 6s. bill stamps, across each of which A. wrote "accepted payable at Messrs. P. and Co.'s, 189, Fleet Street, London," and signed his name, and B., who was present, took up the stamps, and nothing was said as to what was to be done with them, and afterwards bills of exchange for 500l. each were drawn on these stamps, and B. put them in circulation, it was held, that these stamps, with the acceptances thus written upon them, were neither "bills of exchange," "orders for the payment of money," or "securities for money," and that a charge of larceny against B. for stealing the stamps, and for stealing the paper on which the stamps were, could not be sustained, the paper and stamps being the property of B., and continuing throughout in his possession (x). But a check on a banker is the subject of larceny, even while in the drawers own hands(y).

Of the In-Statement of the Instrument.

As in the case of forgery, the indictment for larceny relating to bills and notes must state the instrument by name to have been one of those described in the statute upon which the indictment is founded; and this in general is sufficient, without setting out the instrument verbatim, for describing them in a general manner suffices (z). Under the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, it was held, that an indictment for stealing a bank note, but describing it as "a certain note (not saying bank note or promissory note) commonly called a bank note," was insufficient(a). So if the thing stolen be described as a bank post bill, and be not set out, the court cannot take judicial notice that it is a promissory note, or that it is such an instrument as under the 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, may be the subject of larceny, though it be described as made for the payment And it is insufficient in an indictment for larceny to describe of money (b). bank notes as so many pounds sterling to which they amount in value, but they should be described as bank notes(c).

It suffices and is proper to describe bank notes as "divers, to wit, ten bank notes for the payment of divers sums of money, amounting in the whole to a certain sum of money, to wit, the sum of fifty pounds, and of the value of fifty pounds," without even stating the amount or value of the individual note(d); and it seems it will suffice to describe them as "bank notes" generally (e); or they may be described as "promissory notes called bank notes," or as "promissory notes called bank post bills," according to the fact (f).

Though to make a thing the subject of larceny it must be of some value, and stated to be so in the indictment, yet it need not be of the value of some coin known to the law, that is to say, of a farthing at the least; Reg. v. Morris, 9 Car. & P. 847

*A bill of exchange should be described as "a bill of exchange for the L Larcong payment of the sum of ten pounds(g)." Sometimes, unnecessarily, the bill of Bills, is fully described, though not set forth verbatim as in forgery (h), before the Of the In-2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3.

A promissory note may be described generally as "a promissory note for Statement the payment of five guineas," or "a promissory note for the payment of five of the In-pounds," according to the fact.

If the indictment profess to state the purport, (that is, the very words) of the instrument, it must be set forth with great exactness, or the indictment will be bad, unless it appear upon the face of it, or by averment, that it was an instrument of the description mentioned in the statute and in the indictment(i).

A draft or check drawn in the country on a London banker, may be laid as a warrant or as an order for the payment of money(k).

It has been usual, when the indictment is for stealing several articles, to state the value of each separately, as "one promissory note for the payment of the sum of five pounds, and of the value of five pounds, and two bank notes for the payment of the sum of one pound each, and of the value of one pound each." But it is not essential that the value should be thus separately stated(1).

The instrument as to ownership is usually described as "a bill of exchange Statement for the payment of ten pounds, and of the value of ten pounds, the property ty, &c. of A. B. then and there being found, the said sum of ten pounds secured and payable by and upon the said bill of exchange being then and there due and unsatisfied to the said A. B., feloniously did steal, take, and carry away. against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen, her crown and dignity (m)." words "of the property of A. B.," or the words "which said notes were then and there the property of A. B., and are due and unsatisfied," seem But on an indictment for stealing property which had belonged to a deceased person, who appointed executors who would not prove the will, it was held that the property must be laid in the ordinary, and not in a person who, after the commission of the offence, but before the indictment, had taken out letters of administration with the will annexed; because the rights of an administrator only commence from the date of the letters as distinguished from those of an executor, which commence not from the granting of the probate but from the death of the testator(o). Sometimes a bill of exchange or note has been described as "of the goods and chattels of A. B." but (although bills may be considered as goods and chattels for some purposes(p)) yet as the stealing them (being choses in action) was not at common law indictable as a larceny (q), those words seem untechnical.

The conclusion must be against the form of the statute(r); and although an Conclu-

*With respect to accessories, the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 54, enacts, that where the original offence is felony, the receivers of stolen property may be tried either as accessories after the fact, or for a substantive felony(t).

Where A. and B. were indicted jointly as principal and accessory, A. for stealing six bank notes of 100l. each, and B. for receiving the said notes, knowing them to have been stolen, and it appeared that A. stole the six 1001. notes, and got them changed into 201. notes, some of which B. received, it was held that B. could not be convicted on this indictment (u).

Evidence.

If a bank note be described generally as such, and the instrument is on the face of it a note, the maker's signature need not be proved(v). But if a bank note be unnecessarily described as signed by A. H. for the Governor and Company of the bank of England, the signature should be proved (x).

It will not, however, be necessary to prove in evidence the whole number or quantity of bank notes, bills, &c. alleged to have been stolen(y).

> But these clauses in the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, relating to embezzlement by clerks and agents, do not extend to a person gratuitously engaging to procure the discount of a bill, and converting the proceeds to his own use(c); though an occasional employment would suffice (d). And an employment as clerk, without a formal appointment under a corporate seal, suffices in the case of a corporation(e); and it is not material whether or not the master was legally entitled to the bills or notes received for his use by the  $\operatorname{clerk}(f)$ . Where A. placed valuable securities in the hands of B. with a written direction to invest the proceeds in the funds, "in case of any unexpected accident happening to A." and no accident did happen to A. and the proceeds were converted by B. to his own use, it was held he was not indictable under the now repealed act, 52 Geo. 3, c. 63, and it should seem that he would not be so under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 49(g); and it was also holden, that an allegation in the indictment, that A. placed valuable securities in the hands of B. with an order in writing to invest the proceeds in the government funds, was not supported by proof of an order in the above terms (h)(1).

> With respect to the instrument embezzled, the observations already made in treating of the larceny of bills, &c. will in general apply (i).

Of the Indictment.

And for preventing the difficulties that have been experienced in the prosecution of clerks and servants guilty of embezzlement, the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 7 & 8 Geo. 29, s. 48, enacts, "That it shall be lawful to charge in the indictment, and proceed against the offender for any number of distinct acts of embezzlement not exceeding three, which may have been committed by him against the same master, within the space of six calendar months from the first to the last of such acts; and in every such indictment, except where the offence shall relate to any chattel, it shall be sufficient to allege the embezzlement to be of money, without specifying any particular coin or valuable security; and such allegation, so far as regards the description of the property, shall be sustained, if the offender shall be proved to have embezzled any amount, although the particular species of coin or valuable security of which such amount was composed shall not be proved; or if he shall be proved to have embezzled any piece of coin or valuable security, or any portion of the value thereof, although such piece of coin or valuable security may have been delivered to him, in order that some part of the value thereof should be returned to the party delivering the same, and such part shall have been returned accordingly (k)." Before this statute the property embezzled, or at least some portion of it, must have been specifically described (l).

A party may be properly described as the clerk or servant of one body of persons, though appointed or elected by another body of persons: thus [ *807 ] the clerk of a savings' bank may be described as clerk *to the trustees, though

Of the Indictment.

It is not necessary in an indictment for embezzlement to state from whom the prisoner received the bills, money, &c.(p); but it must appear that the prisoner received the instrument from a third person, for the use of his master, and not from the master or another servant to be paid away by the prisoner, and if a subsequent common larceny count allege that the defendant feloniously stole, adding, "in manner and form aforesaid," referring to the first count, the defendant cannot be convicted on either (q). above statute, where the prisoner was indicted for embezzling several bank notes, he being a clerk and servant of the prosecutor, it being uncertain what were the exact amounts of the bank notes he had received, and they did not exceed 201., the indictment settled by an eminent crown lawyer, stated one note of 101. one of 51., one of 21., and three of 11., so that one or other of this amount might be paid to him, this was held proper by Le Blanc and Bayley, J. because stealing any one would complete the crime of larcey(r).

Receivers may be indicted either as accessories after the fact, or for a sub- Receivers. stantive felony' where the original offence is felony; or for a misdemeanor where the original offence is a misdemeanor(s).

It is not necessary to prove in evidence the whole number or quantity of Evidence. bank notes, bills, &c. alleged to have been stolen; and, therefore, in support of an indictment for embezzling a letter, stating that it contained several notes, it will suffice, though only one should be proved (t): and on an indictment for embezzling one pound notes and other monies, &c. describing them, though the evidence was that other property than that described was embezzled, it was held sufficient(u). Some specific sum or security must, however, be proved to have been embezzled, and the mere proof of a general deficiency in account will not suffice (v).

On the trial of a person under the 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 2, for embezzling a letter containing a bill of exchange, he being at the time employed under the post office, it was held sufficient to prove that such person acted in the service of the post office, and that it was not necessary to go into proof of his appointment (x).

CHAP. II.

III. Obtaining Bills under tences.

Provisions of 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53. [ *808]

obtaining of property by giving a check on a banker, where the party had no account, was not an indictable fraud(y); but in a subsequent *case, when False Pre- the indictment for such a fraud was properly framed upon the repealed statute 30 Geo. 2, c. 24, s. 1, the defendant was held indictable, and was convict-And now by the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, after reciting that a failure of justice frequently arises from the subtle distinction between larceny and fraud; for remedy thereof, it is enacted, "That if any person shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money or valuable security, with intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same, every such offender shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for the term of seven years, or to suffer such other punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as the court shall award: provided always, that if upon the trial of any person indicted for such misdemeanor, it shall be proved that he obtained the property in question in any such manner as to amount in law to larceny, he shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted of such misdemeanor, and no such indictment shall be removed by certiorari; and no person tried for such misdemeanor shall be liable to be afterwards. prosecuted for larceny upon the same facts(a)." Obtaining credit in account Credit not from the party's own banker, by drawing a bill on a person on whom the party has no right to draw, and which has no chance of being paid, is not within the act, though the banker pays money for him in consequence thereof to an extent he would not otherwise have done(b). But obtaining, as a loan, from the drawer of a bill accepted by the prisoner and negotiated by the drawer, part of the amount, for the purpose of paying the bill, under the false pretence that the prisoner was prepared with the residue of the amount, is an offence within the act, the prisoner being shewn not to be prepared, and not intended so to apply the money (c).

within Act.

Nature of Pretences used.

If a person, procuring a tradesman to sell him goods as for ready money, direct him to send his servant with them to his lodgings, and then deliver fabricated bills in payment, retaining the goods, though he cannot be prosecuted for felony in stealing them, he may be found guilty of obtaining them by false pretences (d). And it seems that obtaining money from the county treasurer by a forged order, purporting to be signed by a magistrate, for payment of expences of conveying vagrants, is an offence within the act(e). But a mere pretence that the party would do an act which he did not mean to do (as a pretence to pay for goods on delivery (f), or that he would get a bill discounted (g), is not a false pretence within the act(h). And the pretence must be for the purpose only of obtaining the property; and it has been held, that a pretence to a parish officer, as an excuse for not working, that the party had not clothes, when he really had, though it induced the offcer to give him clothes, was not obtaining goods by false pretences within There may, however, be a sufficient false pretence within the the act(i). statute by the acts and conduct of the party, without any verbal misrepresentation; and therefore it has been held, that where the prisoner obtained money from the keeper of a post-office, by assuming to be the person mentioned in a money order which he presented for *payment, though he III. Obmade no false declaration or assertion in order to obtain the money, it was Bills under a false pretence within the act(k): and it has been also held, that the fact of False Prouttering a counterfeit note as a genuine one, is tantamount to a representation that it was so(l). So if a party obtain goods under the false pretence that he is recommended by a partner, and that a bill of exchange, in reality worthless, is a good one, he may be convicted and punished (m). But where upon an indictment for false pretences in passing a note of a bank that had stopped payment as a good note, though it appeared that the prisoner knew that the bank had stopped payment, yet as it further appeared that two only of the partners in the bank had become bankrupts, and that the third had not, it was held that the prisoner must be acquitted(n).

The observations already made as to the nature of the instrument stolen or embezzled, will be applicable to the case of money or securities obtained under false pretences(0). And, therefore, if a party obtain a check not made payable to bearer, and, consequently, requiring a stamp, he cannot be indicted for obtaining a valuable security within the act(p).

The indictment must specify what the false pretences were by which the Of the Inprisoner obtained the money or security (q). And an indictment under the dictment statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, is bad, unless, in addition to the false pretences, it contain the requisites of a count for larceny; and if it do not allege the money, &c. obtained to be the property of any person, it will not be sufficient, inasmuch as it could not in that state be pleaded in bar to a subsequent indictment for larceny, which it is made by the proviso contained in that section(r). And where an indictment on 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 29, s. 53, stated that the prisoner, contriving, &c. to cheat A. B., falsely pretended to A. B. that he was a captain in the East India Company's service, and that a certain promissory note, which he then delivered to A. B., was a valuable security for 211., by means of which false pretences he fraudulently obtained from A. B. 81. 15s., whereas the prisoner was not a captain, &c., and the note was not a valuable security; it was held, as it did not appear but that the note was the prisoner's own promissory note, or that he knew it to be worthless, there was no sufficient false pretence in that respect; and as the two pretences were to be taken together, that the indictment was bad, and judgment given upon it was reversed on a writ of error(s).

Receivers of property obtained under false pretences are guilty of a mis- Receivers. demeanor, and may be indicted and convicted thereof without the previous conviction of the person guilty of the principal misdemeanor (t).

The general nature of the evidence to be adduced in support of an indict- Evidence. ment for obtaining money or valuable securities under false pretences may be collected from the previous remarks. Where the false pretence is contained in a letter, which is lost before trial, the prisoner may be convicted on parol evidence of its contents(u).

NOTARY'S FEES OF OFFICE.

AS SETTLED THE FIRST OF JULY, 1797.

AT a meeting of several Notaries of the city of London, held at the George and Vulture Tavern, in London aforesaid, on the 1st July, A. D. 1797, the following resolutions were unanimously agreed to, and since approved and confirmed by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England.

First .- That from and after the fifth day of the present month of July, the noting for all bills drawn upon or addressed at the house of any person or persons residing within the ancient walls of the said city of London, shall be charged one shilling and sixpence; and without the said walls, and not exceeding the limits hereunder specified, the sum of two shillings and sixpence.

Second.—For all bills drawn upon or addressed at the house of any person or persons residing beyond Old or New Bond Street, Wimpole Street, New Cavendish Street, Upper Maryle-bone Street, Howland Street, Lower Gower Street, lower end of Grays-in-lane (and not off the pavement), Clerkenwell church, Old Street, Shoreditch church, Brick Lane, St. George's in the East, Execution Dock, Wapping, Dock Head, upper end of Bermondsey Street (as far as the church), end of Blackman Street, end of Great Surrey Street, Blackfrians Road (as far as the circus), Cuper's Bridge, Bridge Street, Westminster, Arlington Street, Piccadilly, and the like distances, three shillings and sixpence; and off the pavement, one shilling and sixpence per mile additional.

Third.—For protesting a bill drawn upon or addressed at the house of any person or persons residing within the ancient walls of the said city (including the stamp duty of four shillings, and exclusive of the charge of noting), the sum of six shillings and sixpence; and without the ancient walls of the said city, including the like stamp duty, and exclusive of the said charge of noting, the sum of eight shillings, agreeably to the second article.

Fourth.—That all acts of honour within the ancient walls of the said city of London, shall be charged the said sum of one shilling and sixpence upon each bill; and for all acts of honour without the ancient walls of the said city, to be regulated agreeably to the charge of noting bills out of the city; and the like charge for any additional demand that may be made upon the said bill, or when the same is mentioned and inscrted in the answer in the protest.

Fifth.-For every post demand and act thereof, within the ancient walls of the said city, the sum of two shillings and sixpence; and without the walls of the said city, the *sum of three [ *814 ] shillings and sixpence (provided the same be only registered in the notary's books), and so in proportion, according to the distance, to be regulated agreeably to the charge of noting bills.

Sixth .- For every copy of bill paid in part, and a receipt at foot of such copy, shall be charged two shillings, and so in proportion for every additional bill so copied (exclusive of the receipt stamp).

Appendix.

Seventh .- For every duplicate protest of one bill, (including four shillings for the duty), shall be charged the sum of seven shillings and sixpence; and so in like proportion of three shillings and sixpence (exclusive of the duty) for every additional bill.

Eighth .- For every folio of ninety words translated from the French, Dutch, or Flemish, into English, shall be charged one shilling and sixpence; and from English into French, Dutch, or Flemish, two shillings for each such folio; and from Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, Danish, and Swedish, one shilling and ninepence per folio of ninety words; and from Latin, two shillings and sixpence per folio; and for attesting the same to be a true translation, if necessary, seven shillings and sixpence, exclusive of fees and stamps.

Ninth.—That all attestations to letters of attorney, affidavits, 4c. at the request of any gentlemen in the law, shall be charged seven shillings and sixpence, exclusive of fees, stamps, and

Tenth.—For every city seal shall be charged one guinea for one deponent, exclusive of attendance and exemplification; and if more than one deponent, ten shillings and sixpence for each additional affidavit.

Eleventh .- For all notarial copies shall be charged sixpence per folio of seventy-two words, exclusive of attestation, stamps, &c.

* The interest on a bill or note (except when it carries interest by the terms of it from the date) is to be calculated from the time it fell due, until the day when final judgment will be signed. The calculation may be at the rate of one penny for each pound per month, but the above Table affords the more precise mode of calculating. It will be seen that the present calculation is made at the rate of £5 per cent, and although since the recent alteration in the usury laws a party may legally stipulate for a greater rate of interest, yet in the absence of any such stipulation the former rate of interest only will be allowed.

B. or not;" Griffits r. Ivory, 3 Per. & Day. 178.

(64.) Subscribing Witness. "On the trial of an action of detinue for a promissory note, the note was called for by the plaintiff's counsel, and produced by the defendant's counsel, and had on the back this memorandum :— 'This draft was signed in my presence on the date within named (signed) N. D.;' it was held, that the plaintiff must call N. D. to prove the making of the note;" Richards r. Frankum, 9 Car. & P. 221.

(65.) 634, note (c), add "sed ride Cronk v. Frith, 9 Car. & P. 197."

686, note (y), second column, line 5 from bottom, for "defendant" read "debt," and for "priority" read "privity."

(66.) 662, Evidence—Consideration. "If A. sign his name upon blank paper stamped with a note stamp, and transmit it to B. with a parol authority to draw a note not exceeding a certain amount, an indorsee cannot, without proof of consideration, recover upon the note if B. has drawn it for a larger sum, though there is no proof that the message conveying the parol authority was delivered to B;" Rowlands v. Evans, E. T. 1840, Q. B. 4 Jurist, 460.

"A declaration on a check on a banker stated that the defendant drew his check on W. and Co., and delivered it to B. L. who transferred it to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded, 1st, that the check was given to B. L. as the nominal value of counters to play at an unlawful game, as B. L. well knew, and that before the plaintiff took the check he had notice of the premises; and 2dly, a similar plea, in which, instead of an averment of notice, it was averred that the plaintiff gave no value for the check. Replication, denying the notice, and stating that the plaintiff gave a good consideration for the check: held, that on these pleadings the defendant must begin;" Bingham r. Stanley, 9 Car. & P. 374.

(67.) 665, note (f), "Where a defendant pleaded that a promissory note, on which the plaintiff sued as payee, was given to the plaintiff as trustee for W., and that W. had made a bargain for its renewal on certain terms stated in the plea, and the plaintiff took issue on the plea; it was held, that evidence of the actual bargain made by an agent of the defendant might be given in evidence, but that evidence of any thing that W. said at any other time was not receivable;" Holt v. Miers, 9 Car. & P. 191.

(68.) 666, note (m), dele third line and add "post, Appendix;" and at end of note add "A notice to produce a letter from the defendant to the plaintiff was served on the plaintiff's attorney at a quarter before nine on the night before the trial. It was a letter on the subject of the promissory note on which the action was brought, and was an answer to a letter from the plaintiff to the defendant on the same subject: held, that the notice to produce was served too late;" Holt v. Miers, 9 Car. & P. 191.

(69) 667, Right to Begin. "In an action on a bill of exchange by indorsee against acceptor the defendant plended pleas denying the acceptance and the indorsement; and also two pleas of pay-ment, upon all which issue was joined. The defendant's counsel at the trial offered to admit the acceptance and indorsement, and wished to begin: held, that this admission of all the facts, the proof of which was on the plaintiff, did not entitle the defendant to begin;" Pontifex s. Jolly, 9 Car. & P. 202.

(70.) 670, Compelency of Witness. "In an action against one of the three makers of a joint and several promissory note, another of the makers was called as a witness, who stated, on the voir dire, that he had signed the note only as a surety for the defendant; it was held, that he was a competent witness to prove the making of the note by the latter;" Page v. Thomas, E. T. Exch.
